has published a long letter addressed to the "moral force" Repealers of Cork. He has proposed to quarrel with myself for not having given a pledge to reply to the resolutions of the meeting of repealers in Cork on the 26th. I do not then perceive that though there is a moral sound, there does not appear much of a moral or working part of those resolutions in that they are so framed, as not to be on the merits. They only insinuate and expressly state, and leave no room for anybody to know that the question is a moral and substantially which principle is the Repeal Association. It is to that of the Cork meeting should have been to condemn the moral force principle and pronounce their condemnation. But they do not do such thing; nor have they ventured to pronounce the physical force doctrine. Their suggestion is something which is neither moral nor physical force, but some species of mongrel between the one and the other. It is an eulogium upon Mr. Smith and does not wish in the slightest degree to qualify. I heartily wish we had the resolutions; but I exceedingly regret that it is impossible to regain them. For in his letter to the association he proposed to free England from the apprehension of a free trade, I must avow it—neither from that or other, can we allow the physical force to become the subject of discussion or of the Repeal Association. The Association, however, concedes; and if it could it ought

Mr. Eyrecourt, M. P. has not embraced the Catholic faith, but his eldest daughter has, and she is the desire of all her family. Lady De Burgho arrived yesterday at Castle Connell. Mr. O'Connell, son of the Lord Lieutenant, presented an annual yearly show and dinner of the Agricultural Society, on Thursday. One of the evening was "the health of Sir John Lubbock's hounds!" The site registered as ten pound free-grange Quarter Sessions last week, as an enormous tenantry. Mr. O'Connell is chairman of the Commissioners to inquire into the ground for the new District Lunatic Asylum. The site comprises 55 acres, the ground is in the hands of Cork and his under-tenants.
