effect that the Reproductive Employment Commission requested to continue their sittings.

which was passed.

THE SECEDERS.

A second aggregate meeting of the seceding members from the policy of Conciliation Hall, or, as they term themselves, "The Irish Party," was held on Monday evening in the large room of the Rotundo, which was crowded. The admission was by tickets, limited to those who had signed "the Remonstrance;" At seven o'clock Mr. Smith O'Brien, M. P., entered the room, and was hailed with loud cheers.
Mr. Sheela Lalor took the chair.
Mr. Smith O'Brien referred to the meeting held in this room on the 30th of May, 1845, the anniversary of the incarceration of Mr. O'Connell and his fellow prisoners; on which occasion he (Mr. O'Brien) subscribed to a resolution and a solemn pledge in defiance of coercion, cajolery, or intimidation, never to descend from seeking the Repeal of the Union by all lawful and constitutional means. He was there about to tell them that he, at least, was prepared to sustain and to fulfil that pledge. (cheers.) Instead of desiring that leadership which was supposed to be the motive of all his actions, he could assure them that it would have given him personal satisfaction to have been able to perform his duty in Parliament or elsewhere, and to follow others, rather than to lead any portion of his fellow-countrymen.
(hear.) It was for them now to consider in what manner their object could be best promoted. He was satisfied, on the part of those to whom they had been addressed, to look for guidance, to suggest to them the formation of a council—(hear)—which should act for the party who found themselves unable, from actual division or from difference of political views, to co-operate with the existing Repeal Association. To this they consented to give the name of the Irish Confederation.
The first aim, both of the council and of all who heard of it, was to extend, as widely as possible, the consciousness of the necessity of a repeal of the Union—mind (hear); upon mind—the force of opinion—not physical force—(cheers.)—He held in his hand the first fruits of the young Ireland agitation.—(hear.) The chief of the young Irelanders was not Charles Gavan Duffy or James S. O'Brien—it was Robert Holmes.—(cheers.) Mr. O'Brien held in his hand a publication issued in the press that morning, entitled "The Case of Ireland," written by that venerable patriot.—And he trusted that there were among the council men who would cheerfully go through the country, to give lectures after the manner of the Anti-Corn-Law League, only drawing from it in respect of their being paid.— It had long been his opinion that the repeal of the Union could not be carried by the democracy alone—
