

his pupils, was never surpassed. And they merit the very high encomiums. It was universally admitted and fretted on during the performances that Mr. Vickers' method of forming pianoforte players peculiarly happy gift may be his best known. There is an ease, certainty, mellowness of style about the pupils heard which attracted the attention, and admiration of all present; and as some remarked, the same peculiarities were in the smallest beginner as well as in the most advanced. It shewing plainly that much, if not all of their early education, as, were they not in the best care in the beginning, they never would have attained the high state of perfection to which those young ladies have attained. It prevents our entering into a minute detail, but in justice to Mr. Vickers, we must begin from the commencement to the end. The arrangements were so admirably, and the arrangements were so perfect, that not the slightest confusion or disorder was occasioned throughout, which must have been the case with such a number of performers. The opinion amongst all present was that it was a proud of an establishment such as this, and creditable to any city in the world—and it would have been gratifying to Mr. Vickers to see the very warm and sincerely kind wishes for the future prosperity of his Academy. The anxiety to be present at this musical treat, altho' the cards of admission were not immediately friends of the pupils, at one time actually reached to the hall-door, the hall filled almost to a crush—many were obliged to leave, in despair of getting near the door. We heartily unite with our fellow-citizens in congratulating Mr. Vickers on the decided success of his examination, but cannot forbear expressing our regret that we are not more frequently favored with such a delightful musical treat.

of the Jamestown, American frigate, in Cork with him to Boston, a likeness of which, the fac simile of that in the possession of the Duke of Devonshire, and to be deposited in the grand hall of the city, ship agent, was decreed by the Corporation of that city to pay Looby and Heffernan, of Tipperary, the former 5s. a day, and the latter 3s. a day for support of their families, having been sent to America by a vessel, which had the time appointed. The Dowager Lady Humble's was amongst the first and impounded by the Duke of Devonshire at Dungarvan. At last, there were five dead bodies lying on the room at Peacock Lane, Cork, and since then more have died. Of the O'Regan's, five are dead—two are dead—and all those in the exception of Denis Regan, are lying in the bed. Dead—seven; sick—six; in health—two. The immense number of pauper strangers who have been presented themselves to claim them. Whittaker and Delvin, of the Tyrawley Street, of Trinity College have conferred the degree of L.L.D. upon George Petrie, Esq. an Irish Antiquarian, and expositor of the mysterious origin. Whittaker and Delvin, of the Tyrawley Street, a bankrupt, despite of his very enterprising exertions to sustain the legitimate national theatre.
