that day, to say in whose favour was the balance of mind? (Hurrah, and a cheer for the Garryowen boy.) He would never lend his aid to that system of genteel transportation called emigration.

Father O'Kearney concurred in all that had been said by Mr. Smith O'Brien.
Father O'Regan—I hope you don't agree in the bayonets.

Dr. Power threw himself now on the constituency of the country. He had put his principles before before them. If they disliked them they could reject him, and adopt some person more palatable to Mr. Smith O'Brien than he was. (cheering.) But if he had pandered to the man who put himself in antagonism with O'Connell, he would be a recreant coward, and unworthy their confidence, or the confidence of any other constituency—(cheers and uproar.)

Mr. E. B. Roche, M.P. said that he came from the purlieus of St. Stephen's, to rally round Power and Repeal—(cheers.)

The High Sheriff said the polling would commence at 9 o'clock in the morning.

Close of the Poll Tuesday evening—Power 241 ; Leader 220 ; majority 21.
Richard Pennefather, Esq., is the Sheriff's assessor.

DR. MILEY, YOUNG DAN, AND THE POPE.
"Rome, 12th, June, 1847.

"BELOVED FRIEND—We have just this moment returned from the audience in which the ever-glorious Pontiff, Pius IX., himself pronounced the eulogium of our Liberator, your immortal father, with such effusion of heart, with so much of the fire divine, and influence of inspiration in his language, in his features, in the air and attitude of his entire person as he spoke, that in vain shall I attempt to describe it to you. In fact, we were beside ourselves with admiration, gratitude, unutterable reverence, and happiness, while we looked and listened. Since receiving his parting benediction we can think and speak of nothing else, of nothing but what we have heard and seen.

"After passing through the vast and gorgeous saloons and galleries of the Quirinal, we found the anti-chambers filled with groups of personages in every style of costume, from the glittering uniform to the cowl, and all before us in the order for reception. But the name of O'Connell was a 'talisman' which brought us at once into the presence of his Holiness ; and while Daniel was kissing his feet, the Pontiff said—'Since that happiness I had so longed for was not reserved for me, to behold and embrace the hero of Christianity, let me at least have the consolation to embrace his son.' He then drew the son of O'Connell to his bosom and embraced him, not unmoved, with the tenderness of a father and a friend. Then, with an emotion which stirred our hearts within us, this great father of the faithful poured out his benign and loving soul in words of comfort which proved that it was not new to him to pour the balm of heaven into broken and wounded hearts. 'His death,' the Pontiff said, 'was blessed.' I have read the letter in which his last last moments were described with the greatest consolation.' I must not attempt to detail the manner in which his Holiness eulogised the Liberator as the champion of religion and the church, as the father of his country, and the glory of the whole Christian world. 'Had the Pope been the bosom friend of the Liberator, and the ardent admirer of his career, how else could he speak of him than he has done?' This was the observation of the Very Rev. Monseigneur Cullen, President of the Irish College, who introduced us ; and better than any detailed description I can give, it conveys an idea of the heartiness of affectionate admiration and sympathy with which his praises were pronounced by Pius IX.

"From O'Connell—the transition was easy and natural—the Pontiff came to speak of Ireland. His expressions breathed the most intensely paternal sympathy, and while he spoke of the sufferings of the Irish, of their fidelity, of his solicitude and hopes regarding them, it was beautiful and impressive beyond my power to describe, to observe that a countenance which, like a mirror, reflects the charity, the compassionate care, the fortitude, with an hundred other sentiments divine, which are never dormant within his breast.

"When speaking of the Liberator's obsequies, he said that already he had notified it as his will and command that they should be celebrated in his name—that he had privileged all the altars—in short, that nothing should be wanting to their magnificence, and that he wished it to be known to the whole world, that this tribute to the memory of Ireland's Liberator was from himself. 'His geste also,' he added, 'the achievements of his wonderful existence, I wish to be cele-
