

The Monthrath and Ballyfin Relief Committee have forwarded to the Relief Commissioners the copy of a resolution of thanks passed by them to Captain Haymes, inspecting officer.

Messrs. Kirwan, of Bolton-street, Dublin, have just completed an exceedingly choice specimen of Irish workmanship, in the science of altar building, for the Franciscan Church in this City. The altar and tabernacle are of chasely veined marble. The delicacy of the execution cannot be exceeded, while the finished beauty of the chiselling is admirable.

JEU D'ESPRIT.

Though short, and but syllable one I be,
Almost all in the world submit to me:
I guard the prince, the peasant, the slave—
I guard the coward—I guard the brave—
The good all love me, and thieves only hate,
For from them I save my master's plate.
When the lover, with many a sigh and prayer,
Implores a tress of his Lady's hair,
And longs for that curl that waves so free,
He seeks me only, and naught but me:
I am also the name of a lady fair,
With dark blue eye and raven hair,
In form, combining the Graces three,
So now for this riddle find out the "key."

STEWARDS' FARM ACCOUNTS, Published by M. Glashan, Dublin.

We (LIMERICK CHRONICLE) have frequently adverted to the writings of Mr. Kingsley, which have proved that he is conversant with the principles of accounts, especially of those parts wherein persons are liable to commit errors.

Three Formularies have been recently published by that gentleman, namely, a Registry of Work Book, to record the names of labourers and the wages earned and paid, &c.; an Abstract Report thereof, and the Form of a Return shewing the receipts and disbursements of the steward. We shall notice the two latter only, as some original matter is put forward by that gentleman which renders them valuable to the country gentlemen. These Forms are printed on a sheet of letter paper, which, when filled up by the steward, is to be laid before his employer at the end of the week, or, in his absence, that agent might forward them by post to his address. The cost will not exceed one penny. On one page, the labour of the week (shewing the number of days the labourers were employed, the wages earned, and the cash paid,) is to be copied from the Registry of work book already alluded to. On the other page is a cash account, shewing the receipts and disbursements of the steward for that particular week for which the return of labour is set forward. This department of farming is before the employer every week in the year, with a precision hitherto unattainable. In our experienced judgment, the most valuable feature in these returns is, that the balance of cash remaining in the custody of the steward is regularly carried forward by him from week to week. That is as it should be; and Mr. Kingsley recommends that the report of the steward should be a literal copy of his cash-book, instead of an abstract thereof. The form, as constructed by that gentleman, is admirably adapted as a model of that record. On a superficial examination, these forms will be found far superior, in utility and in simplicity of design, to any agricultural forms of that character coming under our observation.

The only Galway landlords who have applied for loans under the recent statute, are John Lambert, Esq. for a sum of £1,200, for improvements on the lands of Ballinahinch, and John Augustus O'Neill, Esq., for £6,400, or thereabouts, for drainage of his estate of a similar denomination.

The remains of Master Crosbie Chute, drowned at Ballyheigue on Monday last, were found on Friday about two miles from the fatal spot. He was interred at the family burial place, Bally-M'Elligott church.

A man named Walsh was executed on Wednesday last in Kilkenny, for the murder of a man of the same name, steward of Mr. Milward, has declared his innocence of the crime, but acknowledged he came up immediately after its perpetration, and some of the murdered man's property was found on him when arrested. Owing to the bungling of the hangman, the poor wretch suffered death by suffocation—his throes and agonies being described as of the most dreadful description.

The number of committals to the bridewell of Cove, for drunkenness in the month of August, was 333—total number of committals during the month, 562. In the same month of last year the number of drunkards committed was 498, and for other offences 71.
