SIGHT AND HEARING.

MR. E. SOLOMONS, Optician to the Royal Family, Patentee of Spectacles, 27, Old Bond-street, London; 19, Nassau-street, Dublin; who has visited Ireland professionally for 24 years, announces his arrival at

MISS RYAN'S
HABERDASHERY WAREHOUSE, 32, PATRICK-STREET, LIMERICK,
where he may be personally consulted.

Mr. SOLOMON has—during the interval that elapsed since he last visited this City—accomplished a vast improvement in the Lenses of his manufacture by means of which a smoky influence is effected of the seat of vision, and the most brilliant light transmitted through the various humours of the eye with softness, and at the same time, perfect clarification, so that the sight at once experiences from the adoption of his Spectacles, &c. a sense of coolness and pleasure superior to what has hitherto accompanied their use,—and from which Mr. S. conceives he has brought his invention to the state of perfection which almost takes to itself the degree of superlativeness; being accommodated to all the imperfections and failings of the human system. Now the failure of sight is generally indicated to persons by finding it difficult to nib a pen, to thread a needle, by observing when reading print one letter running into another, or when it is found necessary to place the candle between the eye and the object, in order to see it distinctly. When these occur, or when any of them separately takes place—the assistance of an optician thoroughly acquainted with the Anatomy of the Eye, and Spectacles possessing the various assisting properties, are essentially required. The following eminent members of the faculty, whose testimonials are in Mr. SOLOMONS' possession, have recommended the adoption of his Spectacles in all cases of Defective sight in preference to all others:—
