

DREADFUL MURDER.—An appalling murder was perpetrated at Cappanahane, in this county, on Monday night last, on the person of Thomas Walsh, a farm servant in the employ of Denis Long. It appears, on an inquisition taken before John Cox, Esq., Coroner, assisted by Robert Fetherstone, Esq., J.P., that Long having returned from the fair of Rathkeale late in the evening, partly under the influence of liquor, and suspecting that improper intercourse subsisted between deceased and his wife, deliberately murdered him, by inflicting several blows with a spade on the head of his unthinking victim while he lay asleep in a settlebed in the kitchen. Doctor O'Keeffe, of Bruree, made a post mortem examination, and found the skull literally broken to pieces; the jury found a verdict in accordance, and Long has been fully committed by Robert Fetherstone, Esq., who had him in custody shortly after the perpetration of the murder. Nothing appeared in evidence to justify Long's suspicion, or to inculpate the wife of the murderer.

ANOTHER MURDER.

James Hennessy, farmer, of Goldengrove, near Dundrum, went out at an early hour on Wednesday morning to count his stock in the fields, as usual after the night, and his servant girl having followed her master in about an hour after, found him dead near a ditch, from two gun shot wounds in the head and body. His brother, a land bailiff, was murdered about 9 years ago. The lands of Kilpatrick was the scene of the murder of the former.

A threatening letter, with the Six-mile-bridge postmark, was received by the Collector of Excise in this city, to remove the "Watchers" recently placed there, for the better protection of the paper duties, and stating that no license or duty will be paid in that district.

On the night of the 20th inst., as William Sixpence, was proceeding to his house at Donoman, from Croom, with a bag of meal, which he was after purchasing for his family, he was attacked on the road by three ruffians, who knocked him down, beat him severely, threatened to blow his brains out, and forcibly took away the meal. On receiving information of this outrage, at an early hour on the following morning, Head Constable Phillips proceeded with Sub-Constables Fitzmaurice, and Meagher, and succeeded in arresting John Heffernan, John Sheahan, and Joseph Downes, notorious characters, who were fully identified for the offence, and committed for trial.
