

to the generous benefactors of Rathkeale, whose support to the Branch collection, but it extends to other items of the receipts. For our present treasurer, Mrs. Warburton, collected the sum for the special fund, and contributed to the Bazaar of the past year. I inform his friend, who had just returned so well, and had but lately come from all it had pleased Divine Providence to send over the city and county of Limerick had, in the most cheerful manner, supplied every want. An appeal was made, only when it was necessary, to the members of the United Kingdom. And for doing so, it is a precedent, when famine desolated the Indian church in Asia, St. Paul appealed to the same body in Europe. That their generous response, even they of the most liberal and of their deep sympathy to state that a similar feeling among the Protestants of England, who, with a good feeling, responded to his charity. And he knew of his friends so far were local friends from Limerick, they, in some cases, redoubled their efforts in this cause; whilst those here, for the present, scarcely able to bear the new burdens laid upon them, when they had the top on the column, by depression of agricultural produce, the only answer; such tried friends kept an account to this society, with the firm intention to repay it, with interest, which shall have been overpast. For this hope, for the preservation and charity, not on man but on the Lord, led them under every varying state of distress, they, with a single eye to His glory, enlarged views of privilege and duty. He of all good he looked for such an aid, their machinery as would render the more valuable members of society here, in their behaviour's diadem hereafter. It was then taken up, and exceeded by the preceding year. Located in this and the adjoining parishes, carefully inspected and examined by the clergy after the meeting. Their appearance reflected credit on the superintending ladies in that district. The friends and friends were hospitably entertained on Warburton in the evening. It is mentioned that one of the stall-holders at the sale of work, for the orphans, of the most influential ladies most of their services. All work, prepared for the county, may be, therefore, sent to the Rev. Mr. Beechmount, Rathkeale. Ballingarry meetings in our next.

They Massy thankfully acknowledge the donation of 10s. from J. W. Protestant orphans.
