in quadrilles, is a particular point of merit, and tho' simple, natural, and easy flowing, still the accomplished musician is not prevented from giving new and beautiful points of harmony that declare no common artist to have been at work, and yet done without straining after effect. The themes are well handled throughout, and general arrangement so judicious and attractive, that a moderate performer can execute them without any difficulty. The modulations are effective and naturally agreeable. We have seldom heard a moer graceful effusion, or one more full of musical interest, and independent of the eminent celebrity of the talented Lady, for whom they are composed and dedicated their own merits would not only be sure to pass them scathless, through the ordeal of public criticism, but recommend them to every lover of that delightful accomplishment. The quadrilles are elegantly got up by Wessel and Co., of Regent-street, London. Mr. Sullivan is one of our very best piano-forte players, and his style is particularly brilliant.
