DEATH OF JAMES M'CARTHY, ESQ.
New Orleanian of Tuesday, Oct, 19th.
Afternoon, died Mr James M'Carthy, for-restor of the Limerick and Clare Examiner.
The deceased had been ailing; on Saturday —on Sunday confined to his bed—on Mon-Tuesday buried! And this is life's brief and concise history of numbers; to-day, well —the next day, perhaps, and the throbs ceased its mytic beatings: the eye is ically in death—the tongue is silent for inanimate form, which, but a day or two is replete with life and vigour, extends rigidness, before some anguish stricken group, immediate relatives or endeared would give worlds to hear again that stilled ance—to have the death-filmed eyes look on once more. The deceased had been out some twelve months; but his affad and social manners, made him known nmented him to several. He was of y, and kindly nature—a type of the to his native land in our boyhood's pressive countenance and handsome feas character as truthfully as though it were d in letter-press form on "the human face, cased beneath its broad covering, beat as art, in the bosom of James M'Carthy, as aven bestows on infancy. To him the para-seemed to be the social circle—the com-dred spirits, home associations and happy ge and helpless family, amongst strangers, lly new to them—hardly capable, any one his afflicted wife, of fully appreciating his petrified, as it were, yesterday gathered

A little tiny thing, with eyes reddened rom witnessing others weep, gazed in-the face of her defunct father, anti-mningly, every moment a recognising him who lay before her so calm, so still, mute, from what she had ever known; wont, daily and hourly, to look lovingly lly caress and press her to his manly pity the bereaved! Heaven be merdeparted! We cannot avoid adding spirit, a nobler or braver Irishman, al and generous friend, never dethe circle of his friends and assobelieved with the intestinity of faith that thy would live a long, useful and distinthe land of liberty about which he was ic. But God in his mercy has otherwise Most sincerely do we condole with his
