ADVANTAGES OF LIFE ASSURANCE.

LIFE ASSURANCE, in some form or another, is generally applicable; it is almost impossible to find a case to which some of its adaptations do not apply.

The Man of Moderate Income finds in it the only means by which he can insure to his representative the results of his habitual Economy. The Man who can find no better investment for his surplus. The Man who wishes "to make an appearance" can live up to his income without a reproachful conscience, after he has paid his premium for suitable Life Assurance. The Ambitious Man can give his heart to his plans, and spend his money upon it, providing a sum at his death for the completion of his work, and perhaps the erection of a monument. The Proud Man can relieve his mind of the idea of his family being under an obligation to any person hereafter. The Spendthrift will find in the habit which Life Assurance inculcates, an invaluable check upon his vice and at the same time a remedy for its effects. The Miser may surely hoard for old age, by the purchase of a Deferred Assurance annuity. And the Selfish Man will find he can certainly provide for himself by an Endowment more than by any other plan.

The Bachelor and Spinster, having no children, the maturity will secure a home for their old age, and to insure a sum payable at a certain age, or an annuity for the latter years of Life.

Those who have adopted Children should likewise purchase Endowments; and parents generally may purchase Assurances, provide for the education, marriage expenses, apprentice fees, &c. of their children when they grow up. The possessors of Entailed Estates may provide by Assurance for the younger members of their families. The Honourable Husband can, by purchasing Assurance, secure the terms of a Marriage Settlement. Creditors can protect themselves against the death of a debtor. The Honest Borrower can, by Life Assurance, secure the repayment of a loan, in case his trade enterprise should be terminated by death. The Holder of a Lease dependent upon a tenant's lives can, by Life Assurance, provide a fund to meet the fines of renewal; the purchasers of Annuities can secure the Capital laid out and all who have a pecuniary interest in the continuance of a life can guard their interest against the loss arising from the death of a party.
