To be Let.

A LARGE double CORN STORE with YARD attached in Lower Brunswick-street, is now in the occupation of Mr. T. M. USBORNE. Each Store contains six lofts; the Floors are all flagged and has a large KILN, and the whole is in good order and repair and can be seen on application to Mr USBORNE, at his office Roches-street.

The Nightingale Fund.

THE signal services rendered by Miss NIGHTINGALE to the sick and wounded of the British Forces in the East, have excited throughout the Country a universal desire to testify by some marked and substantial acknowledgment, the gratitude and admiration of the British people.

But Miss NIGHTINGALE has nobly refused to accept any testimonial from which she could derive personal advantage of any description; while it is ascertained that the tribute most in harmony with her feelings and wishes, would be to afford further scope for her disinterested exertions by placing under her immediate superintendence the establishment of an Institution for the reception, protection, and training, of Hospital Nurses and Assistants, whereby the inestimable blessings of the system she has introduced, may be perpetuated and extended generally to the Poor, who may be suffering from sickness or accident.

To effect this object a public appeal has been made to which the noble, the wealthy, and the benevolent have liberally responded. But it is felt, that opportunity should not be denied to any class to manifest the sympathy all are known to entertain towards their devoted and high-minded Countrywoman. The contributions, however small, of those who are dependent upon their labor, will have a peculiar fitness when given for an object by which the necessitous are to be exclusively benefited; while it is certain the widow's mite will have equal value in the estimation of Miss NIGHTINGALE, with the largest gifts of the great and the affluent.

Partaking in these views, the Proprietor of the LIMERICK CHRONICLE has given permission for a Subscription Book to be opened at the Office of the Paper, 37, George's-street, where any contributions however small, will be received and recorded; and the amount collected will be transmitted to the Committee and advertised as the contributions are sent in.
