ADVANTAGES OF LIFE ASSURANCE
 LIFE ASSURANCE, in some form or other, is almost universally applicable; it is almost always profitable; it is almost always safe; it is almost always a case to which some of its advantages are not apply.
 The Man of Moderate Income finds in Life Assurance certain means by which he can insure himself against the lativies the results of his habitual habits. The Rich Man can find no better investment for his Capital. The Man who wishes "to secure a future appearance" can live up to his income, and without a proachful conscience, after he has paid for a suitable Life Assurance. The Man who can give his heart to his plans, and who means upon it, providing a sum at his completion of his work, and perhaps a monument. The Proud Man can rest from the idea of his family being unduly dependent upon any person hereafter. The Spendthrift can break the habit which Life Assurance inculcates upon his vice and at the same time secure against its effects. The Miser may secure for his old age, by the purchase of a Defective Annuity. And the Selfish Man will more certinly provide for himself by Life Assurance, than by any other plan.
 The Bachelor and Spinster, having no other resources, whose maturity will secure a home for themselves, ought to insure a sum payable at a certain age, or an Annuity for the latter years of Life.
 Those who have adopted Children should purchase Endowments; and parents should purchase by Assurances, provide for the education and portions, rpprentice fees, &c. of their children as they grow up. The possessors of Real Estate can provide by Assurance for the support of their families. The Honourable Gentleman can secure the terms of a Life Assurance, secure the terms of a Settlement. Creditors can protect themselves against loss by the death of a debtor. The Debtor can, by Life Assurance, secure the terms of a loan, in case his trade enterprise should fail by death. The Holder of a Lease for years, or life or lives can, by Life Assurance, secure the terms of renewal; the possessor of a Reversion can secure the Capital laid out, and have pecuniary interest in the continuation of the lease, may guard their interest against the loss of the death of a party.
