

and them after making an order that they repair the damage done to one of the police-hats which was all torn in the scuffle. A man Watson said that the prisoners got very stiff. It was no excuse for them that they were soldiers, for that would not excuse their attacking the police, who were merely discharging their duty, in preventing the poace. If it was a poor boy who was charged with assaulting the sailors who were proved to have done, the law would inflict on him a penalty of £1, and he thought that the punishment was not at all too severe for the offence of which they were guilty. Foreigners should be taught to respect the law, and to behave themselves in a quiet and orderly manner. The Lord Lieutenant agreed to recommend to the favourable consideration of the Lord Lieutenant a memorial on behalf of three women who were sentenced to two months imprisonment each for being concerned in the riots. Their trials took place subsequently to the others who were all pardoned. About a dozen men were fined. Sub Constable Thompson said he never remembered to have seen so many drunk in Boherbuoy as he did on Sunday—in the street presented one continued scene of intoxication for the entire evening.

Mr. Watson presided at the City Police Court, Margaret Normoyle was brought up by Constable Doyle, charged with disorderly conduct, for attempting to rescue one of the French sailors on Sunday night, from the police. For this she was sentenced to one month's imprisonment. A charge was then preferred against her of breaking a pane of glass in the window of a man named [unclear], who assisted the police in making the arrest. For this she was sentenced to an additional month's imprisonment. Constable Doyle having stated that a man named [unclear] of the Garryowen Tap was unwilling to give the names of the soldiers who assaulted the sailors, was directed to summon him for next week. Two women were remanded for picking Mr. [unclear]'s pocket.

At the City Police Court this day, before Alderman [unclear] and Mr. Barron, Constable Nash brought up [unclear] and Agnes Fitzallan, on a charge of [unclear] £15 from an officer of the 3rd Buffs. The [unclear] being able to attend Court, the prisoners were [unclear]. Fanny Rankins was sentenced to [unclear] imprisonment for disorderly conduct on Ball's bridge. Mary Collins and Margaret Bennis were [unclear] to seven days imprisonment each for a like offence. The Police got orders to clear away the old [unclear] stands at Ball's bridge.

At the petty sessions of Knock, Messrs. [unclear] and J. M'Auliffe were fined £10 each, at the instance of the Limerick Board of Conservators, for their weirs closed during weekly close time.
