HIS SUBSTITUTE.—A shameful case which it appears that a young Scotch of more money than mind, and of a principle, who desired to serve aagoon regiment, but who distrusted, his ability to pass through the ordeal of examination as a test of competency, procured a substitute, whose notions were as loose as his own to represent him in a private trial. This person was learned, his patron was the reverse, which he was passing triumphantly, and obtaining a certificate in the name of his employer, which respectable and important employer was gazetted to a Cornetcy.

But the reward of successful dishonesty in this instance as it has done to the clever substitute worried the exactions, into a refusal of further perhaps, reduced him to the in- further demands.
