DEATHS.

On Monday, at the residence of his father, North Strand, to the inexpressible grief of his family, Mr. Stephen O'Donnell, jun. aged 25 years. From an early age the deceased gave unmistakable indications of rare talents, coupled with strong devotional feelings. His life may be said to have been divided between religion and literature, the former constituting with him the very end and aim of existence, whilst in reading and the cultivation of a refined literary taste he placed his chief relaxation. Gifted with a lively fancy, and possessed of a mind stored with a prodigious amount, for one so young, of varied and useful learning, which a singularly tenacious memory enabled him to retain, he was a most agreeable and instructive companion, whilst his intensely warm and affectionate manners, and a remarkably joyous and playful disposition made him the idol of his home. To his parents, who beheld in him the pride and honor of their household, his early death is a trying bereavement, for if ever parents were blessed in a child, they were; yet it should help to assuage their grief that from his cradle to his grave his life was a continuous stream of unaltered purity, and that in parting with a beloved child they are but giving a saint to Heaven. His love of religion had led him to enter the Society of Jesus, of which, had God spared him life, he would have become a brilliant ornament; but Providence willed otherwise, and the illness which has terminated in his death sent him back to a world from which his soul, impatient of delay, has now passed to the abodes of eternal bliss.
