

livered religious lectures on Wednesday, Thursday, and last evening, in the Theatre Royal, Henry-street, to crowded audiences, composed of all the religious denominations at present in this city. This man, who is not ashamed to confess openly and without circumlocution, that he has been a collier and a prize-fighter, and that a "coal-pit was his college"; that he never read theology, moral, nor dogmatic; is nevertheless capable of doing immense good, and has rendered incalculable benefits to his fellow men by opening their hearts to the blessed influences of the gospel, and its saving truths. In the discharge of a duty which is that of a messenger of good to men he has worked incessantly—nothing daunts him—no assembly however numerous or aristocratic in appearance blanches his cheek or shakes his nerves. St. Paul fought with lions at Ephesus, and it seems the man of whom we now speak has steeled his nerves by combat, for nothing dispirits him. The scoffer stands rebuked; the sneerer becomes a serious and an attentive listener, and finally finds himself applauding the man whom he came prepared to revile. In England, where he visited the collieries, in discharging the duties of his missionary calling, he has made known to his ignorant countrymen and whilome fellow-labourers the plain and simple religion of the Redeemer, who came to call sinners to repentance by preaching the gospel to the poor, and in this way those who appeared to be neglected by their fellow men have had the path to salvation pointed out to them by this confessedly uneducated, but powerfully energetic man, who, undoubtedly, has thrown his whole soul into the work before him. In his several discourses he gave no offence to any; he did not traduce the Roman Catholic; he did not exalt the Protestant; he did not magnify the Presbyterian; he did not stand hand and glove in the Methodist. No; his doctrine is love to all mankind through the Lord Jesus. He combated nothing but sin, and a disbelief in the all-saving merits of "the Lord who bought us."

The annual meeting of the South Tipperary Auxiliary Bible Society was held on Tuesday evening last, in Clonmel, Captain Adams occupied the chair. The Rev. J. Alcorn, one of the Secretaries, read the Report of the Auxiliary, from which it appeared that the receipts for the year amounted to £78 19s. 2½d., including £9 7s. 3½d. for the sale of Bibles, &c.; and that this exceeds the income for the preceding year by £21. The committee were enabled to forward £50 as a free grant to the parent society, after paying all the expenses of the Auxiliary; and to add to the balance on hands from last year. The meeting was then addressed by the Rev. F. T. Brady, Rector; Rev. John Dill, P.M.; Rev. Ambrose Lawson, and Rev. B. A. Marshall, of Carlisle, who gave an interesting detail of the operations of the society in different parts of the world, especially on the Continent of Europe.—The meeting was subsequently addressed by the Rev. Messrs. Richey and Harley. The collection amounted to £4 0s. 5d.
