

man, has been... to his adopted country an... ple which we are assured will not have been set... in vain.

The best wish which, in our dutiful and affectionate sympathy for your Majesty's sorrow, we can for its mitigation is, that in observing the being virtues of your royal children, and especially is Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, your Majesty may have the comfort of seeing mirrored continued those virtues which distinguished your late Consort."

The Hon. Stephen Spring Rice, seconded the resolution and said that a phrase was used at almost every public meeting and by almost every public speaker, and which was that "he had great pleasure in concurring with the resolution," but that was not a term he could use on the present occasion, which was of deep regret and of sincere sorrow, which was a feeling common to all classes of her Majesty's subjects throughout her wide dominions, (hear, hear,) and the words of the greatest poet of the age who has embodied those feelings of regret in beautiful verse, it is by the poor man who is working at the palace preparing for the Great International Exhibition, (hear, hear); in fact that feeling of regret extended from Asia to America, (hear, hear); an instance of that given us in a letter from New York, and appeared a few days ago in the public papers (hear); persons in New York, which city must be in a state of great excitement owing to the position of political relations and commercial affairs assembled as soon as the news of the Prince's death reached that city, and held a meeting of condolence, and, notwithstanding, the political excitement caused by our supposed hostile position, the very ships in the harbour hung out their flags half mast high (hear, hear), and the reason why this feeling was so strong and universal was that Prince Albert was a disciple of peace throughout the world (hear, hear). He did not confine himself to his own country in his patronage and encouragement of efforts of peace because the machinery which he set on foot extended peace principles all over the world—(hear, hear). His motto might truly be said to be—"Peace on earth—good will to men" (hear, hear). (The hon. gentleman) was not able to point any portion of the world, in which this feeling of regret has exhibited itself, but whilst he looked at home he would not refrain from saying that it was quite natural that it should exist amongst us (hear, hear), and that he had the unanimous vote of that meeting in support of the resolution would prove to her Majesty and to the world (hear, hear)

The High Sheriff put the resolution which was carried unanimously.

Colonel Dickson, M.P., said that before he moved the resolution which was put into his hand, he would follow the instructions he received from a nobleman who was unavoidably absent on that occasion, and those instructions were to apologise for the absence of the Earl of Clare, the Lieutenant of the county, and to state that nothing but the difficulty of undertaking a long journey would prevent him from being present at that important occasion, but who, although absent, was in heart in the object for which the meeting was convened (hear, hear). He (Colonel Dickson,) concurred in the observation made by his Rt. Honble. colleague, and at this was not the time to make long speeches, because it was not necessary to further excite those deep feelings of sympathy which already existed in every class in the community, and which have been so eloquently portrayed by one of the greatest orators of the day (hear, hear), they had next to deplore a melancholy calamity, and he did not think it possible to add one page of history in which was recorded the
