FEARFUL EFFECTS OF INTEMPERANCE.

The City Coroner, John Gleeson, Esq., held an inquest in the board-room of Barrington's Hospital on vesterday, assisted by a respectable jury, on the remains of a man named James Flyun, by trade a mason, but much better known throughout the city by the sobriquet of Pencil Flynn, and, unfortunately for himself, an incorrigible drunkard. His earthly career terminated on Saturday night last by being (as the medical gentleman said on the inquest) literally "baked" by fire!! About a fortnight ago he was brought before the justices by the police, and charged with the commission of his old offence, but upon his most solemn promise of never again offending, backed by the interference of his employer, he was permitted to go at large, reproved and cautioned, but unpunished, and nothing more was heard of him until Sunday morning, when the fearful intelligence ran through the city that Pencil Flynn was burned to death whilst in a fit of drunkenness, and such indeed was the catastrophe. The unfortunate deceased had been at work all Sat rlay at a house which is in course of building by a respectable citizen at Corbally, from whence he returned late at night, and was seen by a watchman named Martin Desmond (who was examined on the inquest) going into the house in which he lived, and which is situate in Malthouse-lane, off Athlunkard-street, and which is set out in tenements. The deceased occupied a room—there was no furni-ture in it except a miserable kind of a "shakedown," nor was there anyone with the deceased. About one o'clock on Sunday morning he (the watchman) heard a noise in the house, and went upstains to Pencil's room, and there he saw the unfortunate man all in flames, and, although stopidly drunk, endeavouring to tear off his clothes. He was on fire from the hips up. He and another watchman named Maloney, who came to his assistance, extinguish the fire, and by the aid of some of the neighbours conveyed the deceased to Barrington's Hospital at about two o'clock in the morning. Molony, the second matchman, corroborated his confrere's statement about the finding of the deceased in flames, and removing him to the hospital.

Dr. M'Malion, resident phy an at Barrington's, stated that the deceased was another to the hospital about two o'clock on Sunday and ting, and that upon examining him he found him to be most extensively burned over the chest, the arms, back, loins, and hips—in fact (said the doctor), the unhappy man was literally baked / And to render the matter worse, he was drink when he arrived at the hospital. But every care that could be taken of him medically was rendered to him, and a clergyman was sent for, and attended at once, but had to leave, as the deceased was then drunk and insensible to any spiritual aid, or, in fact, any aid that could be given him. The clergyman attended subsequently and administered to him the rites of the Church. The unfortunate man idied at two o'clock on Monday morning.

The Corner charged the jury, who found the following verdict:—That the deceased came by his death in consequence of being burned whilst in a state of intoxication. .

PRIMITIVE WESLEYAN METHODIST SOCIETY.

Yesterday evening a tea meeting was held in the Society's Chapel, Bedford-row, in order to receive interesting addresses from several clergymen who attended. The admission was by tickets at one shilling each, and the number who satdown to tea ex-200. The object of this meeting was ceeded liquidation of a debt due for recent repairs, and in effecting this object we are happy to say that the society was successful. It may not be out of place here to observe that the confectionary and tea were excellent and abundant, and were supplied by a few ladies connected with the chapel.

After tea, and when thanks had been given, Thomas Esq., was moved to the chair. thanking the meeting for the honour which had been conferred upon him by moving him to the chair, he alluded to the object which the society had in view in convening its members together on that evening, and congratulated them on the success which attended their exertions in the cause of religion, as he was happy to inform them that the building was now out of debt, a fact which demonstrated that all efforts in the cause of religion, properly and prayerfully directed, would eventually succeed (hear, hear).

The situation remains wholly unaltered before Fredericksburg except that both armies have received reinforcements. PRESIDENT LINCOLN MESSIGE.

The Times finds in the President's message a bid for peace. He must suppose that he has offered something which there is some possibility that the South may accept. If he had to buy the whole 4,000,000 of slaves at $500 a head, he would get them for two billions, which would be less than the cost of 4 years' more war.

The Times adds, that the Union should be restored by such a very simple process as this, and should emerge out of this great strife, steadled by a debt of some 300,000,000 of dollars and purged from its curse of slavery, is, we are afraid, the dream of a very

The Star says, Mr. Lincoln's plan may fail to subdue the South, but the North will not fail to break in pieces the corner-stone on which the South has ventured to erect an impious independence.

The Herald criticises the message in detail, and finds it made up of platitudes, absurdities, and inconsistencies. Mr. Lincoln appears to be so careless or ignorant as not to know that if the Confederate States were not allowed beligerent rights, we should have to inform the Government at Washington we could not tolerate the blockade of the Southern ports or the search of British vessels which are permitted to it.

The Post cannot imagine upon what grounds the Federal Government arrives at the conclusion that Great Britain, after having once recognised the belligent character of the South, should have receded
