IRISH AGRICULTURAL STATISTICS.

Another of Mr. Donnelly's interesting and useful compilations of statistical facts, which elucidate the conditions of the country, has been issued from the press. It comprises the general abstracts, collected with great care by an organized body of enumerators specially selected for that duty from the Constabulary Metropolitan Police Force, and numbering nearly 30 persons. They show by counties and provinces, the acreage under the several crops in the years 1863, 1861, and the number of each description of live stock; and a table is appended, which gives the number of emigrants from each province during the first seven months of these years.

The general results of these statistics are such as might have been expected from the circumstances of the country during the last year. They exhibit an increase in the area under oats, barely, beans, and peas, and a decrease in those under wheat, bere, and rye, the total diminution in the acreage under cereals being 701. In 1860, the number of acres under cereals was 2,630,384, whereas last year it was only 2,623,683. This is a serious falling-off, which is not likely to continue. In the wheat crop, however, there appears to have been a decline for some years. Going back to 1857, we find that there were 559,646 acres under wheat; 546,964 in 1858; in 1859, it fell to 464,175; in 1860, there was a slight rally to 466,415; but last year it declined to 406,261 acres. The oat crop, on the contrary, has been more largely cultivated,—a circumstance due, in a great measure, to the climate being more favourable for its production than wheat. In 1861 there were 12,000 acres of oats more than in 1857. The total acreage, however, under cereal crops has diminished in those four years from 2,786,898 to 2,623,683, a decrease of 163,145 acres. It is somewhat remarkable that there has been a contemporaneous reaction in the acreage under green crops, &c. In 1860 they covered 1,607,642 acres; last year the number was 1,570,668, showing a decrease of 36,974 acres. This is partly to be accounted for by the inducements to cultivate flax, and also the conversion of lands into pasturage. There were last year 40,000 acres more under flax than in 1857; and the quantity of land in meadow and clover has increased during the same period from 1,369,892 to 1,546,549 acres.

As regards live stock, the returns show a falling off, which is somewhat discouraging. In the important class of horned cattle the animals are fewer by 138,316 than in 1860. The diminution of pigs is also very great, the decrease amounting to 173,096. Of horses there are fewer by 5,993. There is a slight increase of 1,839 in the number of sheep.

Comparing last year with 1858, we find that there were fewer cattle, sheep, and pigs in the country by 34,294. In the number of horses there has been an increase to the extent of 57,531. The total value of the decrease in live stock, between 1860 and 1861,—horses being valued at an average of £8 each; cattle, 6 10s.; sheep, 22s.; and pigs, 25s. each,—is £1,161,345. These figures suggest much matter for reflection.

With respect to emigration, it appears that the total number of emigrants for the first seven months of 1860 was 55,782, whereas in the same period of 1861 it was only 45,508, showing a decrease of 10,274. This is partly attributable to the disturbances in America, which checked the flood of emigration, and men sent it back again upon our shores.—Daily Express.
