THE ATLANTIC TELEGRAPH.—Periodically, and as if by necessity, the great question of uniting Europe and America by telegraph, surges up and demands a practical solution. And it is quite natural that it should do so. No scientific industry of modern times has been more economically successful than the electric telegraph. There are now at work, in the United States of America, 40,000 miles of telegraph, extending from San Francisco, on the Pacific, to the verge of the Atlantic Ocean—where it is again proposed to land a cable which shall have its other end at Valentin Bay. There are upwards of 150,000 miles of working telegraph in Europe. A telegraph spanning the Atlantic would unite the electric wires of America with those in Europe—as those in Europe are now united with many in Asia and Africa. Establish a telegraph link between Newfoundland and Ireland, and instantly means would be taken to connect our West Indian Colonies and those of other countries with the mainlands of North and South America—thus bringing the whole industrial system of the two Americas into connection with that of nearly all the rest of the world. This question of an Atlantic telegraph is not merely economically and morally interesting to England and the United States, but it involves world-wide results. It would not only be the greatest triumph of science, but it would be the means of bestowing a rich inheritance of blessings on mankind. It is a benefit which the statesman, the capitalist, the economical reformer, the philanthropist, and philosopher, may heartily join hand-in-hand to promote. We believe it is possible and practicable; and if the Governments of England and the United States will render legitimate assistance, the great idea may soon be made a great fact. It may be said that an attempt was made a few years since, and the result is a useless and perishing cable at the bottom of the Atlantic. It would be folly to pass over this significant fact in silence. The failure of that cable should not, however, be a rock to discourage, but rather a beacon to guide in the pathway of future efforts. It is almost certain that the Atlantic cable failed from controllable causes. It was manufactured and laid with undue haste. Conditions, moral and scientific, which should have been complied with, were trifled with or neglected. In a second attempt care must and will be taken.—Mechanics Magazine.
