

s father, a cottier farmer in the county before he was born, but his remaining every nerve to educate the child whom, as no ordinary boy. She kept a little herself, and after some preliminary teaching sent to the seminary of a Mr. Grace. Years we find him at the University of Portugal, where he studied closely, and passed into infidelity. It was in the year 1790 that the province was flooded with the revolutionary spirit. Not for two or three years did he recover the equilibrium of his mind, the superiority of the Christian religion, even the form which was his profession, to all infidelity. As a bishop, some of his best remembrance. His chief rule of life, that every priest should be able to do his duty, and be lazy and incapable, no matter how long standing, had no chance of promotion. Finding a priest once going to officiate in the diocese, he plucked them off his back from the episcopal hands. His supervision of his diocese. But, perhaps, the most interesting part of his career is that immediately before his death. He was liberal and enlightened to a degree which satisfied his brother bishops. His copy of the Bible has such annotations as "shock" in the margin in sundry places. During his life no expression is recorded by his Roman Catholicism. Mr. Fitzpatrick, which does not savour of simple belief in the grand doctrines. No allusions to purgatory, no pleasures of his religion, but a reliance on the blood of Jesus Christ, and on that pardon of his sins; and so we hope that among the redeemed souls before the throne, who have made their robes white, not by their endeavours, but simply in the blood of the Lord. Benjamin Jacob, in moving the vote on the petition, related how he had once heard Dr. Doyle preach during Passion week a very striking sermon, and to this hour he remembered distinctly; and yet once, during a journey from Dublin to London, with Miss Anderson, one of Dr. Doyle's daughters, who, from her childhood, had been under the supervision of Rev. Mr. Radcliffe, he read both versions of the Scriptures under his supervision. Rev. Mr. Radcliffe wrote a note of thanks, and the large assembly was highly gratified with the very interesting sermon he had heard. We understand that the next sermon was delivered by Rev. H. C. Eade, from the Church in the Catacombs.

A very numerous deputation of the friends of St. Alphonsus, waited upon their popular teacher, Monsieur de Prins, and accompanied him with a very handsome evening service accompanied by an address of congratulation on the occasion of his marriage. The address contained expressions of esteem for the personal and professional attainments of the gentleman to be complimented, and also an expression of satisfaction entertained by the members of the Society on the impulse given to musical taste and devotion of their body, especially as regards the choir. M. De Prins made a suitable reply, and the deputation withdrew.
