Never has the grave closed over a more affectionate husband, a better father, nor a truer friend. His whole life was remarkable for acts of charity and benevolence; whenever the cry of distress and tribulation reached his ear his tender soul was filled with compassion, and he was ever ready to bring relief and consolation to the sufferer. He retained his senses to the last moment, and being perfectly resigned to the will of his Creator, and trusting in the mercies of the Redeemer, he breathed his last in the bosom of his family. On the 15th his remains were conveyed to Old Kildimo, the burial-ground of his ancestors; and the vast multitude that accompanied him thither showed how much he was respected by the rich and beloved by the poor.
