

which was shortly this. On the day in question Mr. Haines sent his lad to his flour stores, which are situate in Bowdy-lane, to deliver 4 sacks of flour to a customer which duty being performed the young lad returned to his master's establishment in George-street having locked the store. Mr. Haines having some business at the store, for which he had a duplicate key, went there, and to his surprise found the prisoner loading his dray with the flour out of the stores, and of which he had three sacks ready to start away with—when arrested and searched no keys were found on him, but the Constable found the remains of two sacks of flour in his residence at Penny-well.

Mr. Haines was examined, and stated that he gave no authority to the prisoner to get this flour. That he had his own drayman to deliver his goods to his customers, he admitted however that he often employed the prisoner, and had found him honest.

The boys in Mr. Haines employment were also examined, and they deposed that they did not give the prisoner any authority at any time to take flour out of the store.

Mr. Doyle, who defended the prisoner, spoke to evidence, and produced witnesses who gave his client a good character. After which his Worship charged the jury, who after some short deliberation found the prisoner guilty, and the learned Chairman sentenced him to 9 months' imprisonment with hard labour.

LITERATURE AND ART.

JOURNAL OF PHOTOGRAPHY—Castle-Street, Liverpool.

We have received the first number of the "British Journal of Photography" which is the official representative of Eight Photographic Societies, and is pre-eminently the recognised Organ of Photographers—Professional and Amateur. Every department of Photography—Optical, Chemical, Mechanical, and Artistic—has its representative writer in its columns, and its correspondents and contributors embrace the names of those who have been identified with the rise and progress of the Art during its brief but important history. The Photographic Almanack, or Complete "Photographers Pocket Remembrancer," price 3d., conveys an unprecedented amount of information not only to the merchant, the historian, and the man of business, but to the artizan, and its cheapness renders it accessible to all classes, by whom it ought to be, in our opinion, patronized.

In almost every case tried at Quarter Sessions in Ireland this term, where putative fathers were proceeded against, the prosecution has failed from the want of corroborative evidence. The portion of the recent Poor Law Act bearing on such cases will have to be amended in the ensuing session of Parliament.

On Wednesday night six large ricks of Turf was entirely destroyed at the Ahamore bog, Tralee, by some persons unknown. About eleven o'clock the cowardly incendiary began the work of destruction by setting fire to this fine lot of a most valuable and useful article, and were it not that it was observed so soon a far greater amount of injury would be sustained.
