

street, adjoining Eden-quay. A reference table gives heights and distances which supply the place of a section and descriptive particulars respecting the style of architecture of the various public buildings within view of the site. Altogether the information furnished is very complete, and at present we are unable to suggest anything more than could be desired. At the committee on Wednesday, Mr. Carmody was highly complimented for the manner in which this indispensable preliminary has been executed, and architects and artists making use of the plan will concur in the approbation expressed by the members of the committee. The conditions on which the artists are to compete, bearing the signatures of the secretaries, are annexed to the plan.—Dublin Builder
