FRANCE.

Paris, Nov. 21.—The Moniteur du Soir, in its bulletin, alludes to the recent acts of the Italian Government and the circular of Baron Ricasoli, and says:—The Florence Cabinet reproduces now the ideas so often expressed by the Government of the Emperor, whose efforts have always tended towards reconciling the national aspirations of the Italian peninsula with its religious sentiments. In presence of such a disposition on the part of the Italian Government, the Holy Father may look forward to the future with confidence; and there is every reason to believe that the extreme Pontifical parties will not prevail, and that the Court of Rome will show itself inaccessible to influence which, under the mask of false zeal, hides intentions prejudicial to the security and dignity of the Pontifical throne.

ITALY.

Florence, Nov. 21.—The King arrived here at one o'clock to-day, accompanied by the Princes Amadeus, Humbert, and De Carignano. His Majesty was received at the railway station by the authorities. The troops and National Guard were under arms, and the immense crowd which had assembled greeted his Majesty with prolonged cheering. The streets are decorated with flags, and the city will be illuminated this evening.

R. BULL,

117, GEORGE-STREET, LIMERICK.

October 2

To the Burgesses OF THE SHANNON WARD.

GENTLEMEN,—

HAVE you read Stierne's "History of a Great Watchcoat," and do you remember the tenacious grip he that was invested with that comfortable garment kept of it, and how anxious he was that it should remain in the family?

Well, have you no parallel for this in your city? Yes, well nigh forty (shall I say watchmen!) at all events, men whom you have invested with little coats with which they are extremely loath to part. Of these forty you have evinced a determination to divest one of the coat (I suppose not thinking him much of a watchman), and looking about for one who might wear the coat more worthily, the choice has fallen on your "humble servant."

At this not alone the said watchman, but nearly all his fellow watchmen (if watchmen they be) are mightily put about, and exclaim that it is an invasion of "vested rights" and moreover employ with the supporters of your humble servant supplications and appeals, "ad misericordiam," and these failing, even menaces.

I protest, gentlemen, that as regards your governing body, or Town Council, I consider your position no better (as far as in them lies) than that of the ancient Romans under the Decemviri, or the Athenians under the thirty tyrants.

What causes this? Is it that you are not yet sufficiently exasperated? or that you have not pluck? Answer for yourselves.

Is it not ridiculous that you should be always represented by the same set of men? and what has come of it but cliques and jobbery.

What made the Republic of Rome great? Was it not her consular form of government? whereby a constant and quick succession of new men was secured, each of whom was anxious to signalise his term of office by adding to his country's grandeur either in territory or glory.

Where are your new men? You have but one, and in his year of office he has done more for your city than your members of parliament and Town Council have for a quarter of a century, and compared with whom both are but drones.

At your call I have come forward to do my possible for you. Monday next will prove whether you are in earnest, your opponents are active and unscrupulous; what else can be looked for from men whose practice has been "ruere in pejus," and whose motto, "caw me and I'll caw thee."

You have adopted for your watchword, "promovere in melius," and you are anxious to be represented by one who will not prove a pliant tool.

Should you elect me, in this respect, at least you will not be disappointed.

Honoured by your confidence, I have responded to your invitation to stand, tho' I would prefer "to keep the noiseless tenor of my way."

Your confidence is not misplaced.

I am, Gentlemen, Your obedient servant,

JONATHAN ELMES.
