The London correspondent of the Freeman states that it is believed in well-informed circles that a Government investigation into the conduct of the Lancers in Dunganarvan will be instituted immediately.

On Monday as Major Wombell was leaving the Dunganarvan Courthouse after having given his evidence, he was, it is stated, served with a writ of summons and plaint at the suit of Mr. De la Poer, M.P. for co. Waterford, for having, as alleged, made use of certain expressions towards that gentleman impugning his loyalty. The substance of the alleged slander has already appeared. Damages in the suit are laid at £5,000 and the venue is laid in Dublin.

Another death occurred at three o'clock on Monday morning in Dunganarvan, which is said to have resulted from the violence at the election. The name of the deceased is Richard Keily, a baker and grocer, living in the Main-street. It is alleged that on the day of the polling he was pursued by a Lancer, and had a most narrow escape of his life. The fright so preyed on a previously enfeebled frame and excited mind, that he immediately took to his bed, from which he never afterwards arose. Deceased leaves a wife and two children. He was always regarded as an honest, quiet, and respectable man for his station in life.

On Sunday the 13th inst., Patrick Dwyer, aged 40, a labourer, in the employment of Laurence Ryan, farmer, of Longstone, got out of his bed at about 6 o'clock, a.m.; he returned to bed immediately, saying to his wife, 'tis time enough for me to get up yet, and instantly expired. On Monday the 14th inst., at 12 o'clock noon, Thomas Costelloe, Esq., coroner, assisted by Dr. John Ryan, of New Pallas, held an inquest on the body, and the following is a copy of verdict—"We find that deceased Patrick Dwyer, died on the 14th inst., by the visitation of God."

The Radical members of the House of Representatives still insist on proceeding with the impeachment of President Johnson.

A beautiful, well educated, and energetic young lady, the daughter of a landed proprietor in Ireland, eloped with the son of a poor farmer taking passage on the ship American Congress, which arrived last week at New-York from Liverpool. Her brother followed in the Java, and from Halifax telegraphed to New York police superintendent to have the lady detained should the ship arrive before he did. The detectives found the girl when the ship anchored in the bay, and she was taken to head quarters, where she stated that she would marry none but the man who was the companion of her flight; that, although engaged to a gentleman now in China, with an income of £30,000 a year, she chose the man of humbler rank, whom she learned to love when her passions were pure and love that of innocence; and him she would have. She had sold her horse, and borrowed £20 of her brother to pay the expenses of her journey. There seemed to be but one way, and a clergyman was accordingly summoned, and the marriage ceremony performed—the brother arriving just in time to be one of a party at a wedding which he had travelled so far to thwart, but to which he became reconciled upon learning all the circumstances of the romantic affair.
