

ly described the driving of the Moors from Grenada the Spaiards, as the Irish would drive the English out of this country to-morrow if they were strong enough (loud cheers.) If, vi et armis, one nation just overthrow another, he could only say he believed the right of this—the Irish nation—was perfectly as good and just as the right of the English nation on their own soil (loud cheers). He was there to-night standing on the ground of right and justice and peace between the two countries (hear, hear). England might, as the stronger nation, walk over this country—he believed she could walk over it six times over if she chose (no, no), but he did not think she had a right to walk over Ireland at all (loud cheers).

Song—"Fontenoy."
The Mayor in proposing the toast of "Our Exiled Countrymen," expressed his pleasure at hearing so beautifully rendered a song which reminded him of many historical incidents of his country's annals, the bravery of the Irish soldier at home and abroad, their banishment at Cremona, as well as Limerick, whose shameful violation of treaty he believed the energy and moral force of Irishmen would yet exact the fulfilment of. He believed that a spirit of concession had been aroused on the part of the dominant race. He did not say whether it was owing to Fenianism or to the barrel placed under the prison at Clerkenwell; but he believed he paid a solemn act of justice to his countrymen—as solemn an act of justice as if he were a High Priest, when he said those noble men—Len, Barratt, Larkin, and O'Brien—who sacrificed their lives for their country, ought to be remembered and respected as good Catholics and good patriots (loud cheers). There was at this moment in the country young prince of the English nation.

A Voice—He be d—d.
Another voice—No; he's welcome.
The Mayor continued to say that, when that noble shaman, O'Farrell, fired at the Prince in Australia, was imbued with as noble and patriotic feelings as Franklin, Allen, and O'Brien were (great cheering, and as of "he was"). He believed that O'Farrell would as highly thought of as any of the men who had sacrificed their lives for Ireland (loud shouts of bravo.) They all saw how a noble Pole had fired the Emperor of Russia, because he thought that the Emperor was trampling upon the liberties of the people (cheers). Well, O'Farrell, probably, was actuated by the same noble impulse when he fired at the Prince. O'Farrell was as noble an Irishman as the Poie, and as true to his country, for each was killed by the same sentiments to do what they did best. The Press of England had so calumniated him, and the Orange Press of Ireland had so misrepresented them and their cause, that he would not be able to do them justice if he could (applause). He believed that England would be able to crush them now ten times over (loud cries of "no, no"). That was his belief, but still he believed that England, if she had the power at her back, must give way at (cheering). He could tell them why, too. From the spread and influence of public opinion, he believed that would not be allowed to trample on the rights of the Irish people (cheers). Even if she wished to do so she would not be allowed. He believed that the rights of this country must be conceded (great cheering).

he toast was proposed to.
The Mayor, in responding 'Our Guests,' said he had there to acknowledge his act under the sceptre of Victoria, and to answer the Government. He was doing his duty. They held Ireland by wrong, and oppression.
Colonel Warren acknowledged the toast, and took occasion to denounce the scribes who had rebuked him for his public speech.

April 29.

His Royal Highness Prince Arthur Patrick arrived at Derry, on Wednesday, by the Dublin mail train that afternoon. He was received by the civic authorities, and, after receiving a congratulatory address of welcome, proceeded to his hotel. The weather was brilliant, and the reception most enthusiastic.

It is stated that the Prince and Princess of Wales will probably leave for Brindisi on the 1st of May, in HMS Ariadne.

The Owl says that the probability is, that the government will make some concession to the Opposition on the consideration of Clause 27 of the Irish Church Bill, and that Mr Gladstone will abandon that portion of it which provides that ecclesiastical residences may be handed over to the representative body on payment of a sum equivalent to twelve times the annual value of the site.
