THE SWEETS OF CAPTIVITY.—From a letter in the Geraer Zeitung we learn that French prisoners of war seem to prefer the sojourn in Germany to the perils of sea-bubble reputation in the cannon's mouth. It is lately made known to the French prisoners at Mayence that 240 Frenchmen were to be exchanged for an equal number of Germans, and that they were desirous of profiting by the opportunity requested to come forward. Strange to say, a single man accepted the invitation, so that the requisite number had to be chosen by lot. It could be plainly seen by the chapfallen countenances of such as were thus selected that liberty was anything but welcome under the circumstances. Many of them shed tears on parting with their comrades.

SUFFERING IN METZ.—Marshal Leboeuf is to be commanding a portion of the army. Wooden huts are being sent from Germany to the camp before Metz. A French deserter from the camp belonging to Leboeuf's command, reports that there is no bread and no salt in Metz. A Daily Telegraph says:—"Bazaine has impressed into service all the able-bodied civilians. Including the artisans and the garrison, the number of men under arms is 100,000. The duty is very severe, and the troops continually sleep on their arms. A mutiny is said to be impending. Some of the men refuse to be sent to the soirtees on account of the risk, and it is to be feared that they will be forced to perform outpost duty." The disease, chiefly dysentery, bronchitis, and cholera, prevails in Metz."
