

than to furnish confirmation, and to receive the demeanour he met in circumstances. The Ketteler to Rome, which was secured to the Pope by the use of his spiritual functions, is probably more to do with political than religious impressions in the phrase of a justly celebrated Church in a free State," and, is at best only an image as the Catholic Church has a naturally antagonistic attitude.

How long Italy can sustain a Curia to work zealously and indispensably necessary—that is for the destruction of the present government—I must leave to be quoted as an axiom to deter-
