ISLINGTON CATTLE MARKET—THIS DAY.
Rather firmer feeling pervaded the cattle market to-day. The supply of beasts was moderate. Prime breeds were scarce, and fully as dear; other descriptions dull. Short supply of sheep. Demand rather better, and prices well supported. Prime South Down wethers, 6s 6d to 6s 8d. Calves and pigs were taken off quietly at late prices.

LONDON CORN MARKET—YESTERDAY.

EARL COWPER AND THE BUTLERS.—The House of Lords has recently decided that Earl Cowper has established his right to the barony of Butler, of Moore Park, as heir-general of the great Duke of Ormonde's son, the Earl of Ossory; but this barony of Butler must not be confounded with the ancient barony of Butler or Le Botiller, which can be traced back in the Dunboyne branch of the illustrious house of Ormonde to the time of King Edward I. The barony of Butler, of Moore Park, recovered by Lord Cowper, dates from the year 1665, when the gallant Earl of Ossory, son and heir apparent of the great Duke of Ormonde, was summoned to Parliament. Few histories in the peerage are more brilliant, or more full of incident and romance than that of the Butlers of Ormonde, the great rivals in antiquity and renown of the Geraldines of Kildare and Desmond. The acme of their political importance was in the time of the Dukes of Ormonde, the charm of their romance in the fierce period of their conflicts with the Irish chieftains, and their feuds with the Geraldines. At various periods the earldoms of Carrick, Ormonde, Ossory, Wiltshire, Brecknock, Arran, Gowran, Kilkenny, and Lanesborough, the viscounties of Thurles and Mountgarret, and the baronies of Dunboyne and Arklow, have, in addition to the dukedom and marquise of Ormonde, been enjoyed by this distinguished race. A very curious misapprehension deprived the senior line of the enjoyment of its hereditary honours from the time of the forfeiture of the second Duke of Ormonde, in 1715, to the year 1791. It had been supposed that an attainder passed by the British Parliament had power to attain an Irish honour, and, consequently at the decease of the forfeited duke the earldom of Ormonde became dormant; but in 1791 the Irish House of Lords declared that no proceeding of the English Legislature could affect an Irish dignity, and restored the earldom of Ormonde to John Butler of Garryricken, the great grandfather of the present Marquis of Ormonde. The Dunboyne branch, in which vested, as we have just stated, the ancient barony of Le Botiller, derives its descent from Sir Thomas Butler, next youngest brother of Sir Edmond Le Botiller, Earl of Carrick, Lord Justice of Ireland, father of James, first Earl of Ormonde, and since its divergence from the parent stem has, as an independent family, maintained a high historic position. The title of Dunboyne was conferred by Henry VII. on Sir Edmund Butler, Baron Le Botiller, of Dunboyne, but, like other ancient Irish dignities, it paid the penalty of loyalty, suffered outlawry, and remained thus obscured until better times. In 1827, by virtue of a royal warrant dated at Windsor, the Dunboyne outlawries were reversed in favour of James Butler, the heir male of his distinguished house, and his lordship's son and heir, the present Lord Dunboyne, one of the Irish representative peers, had the hereditary right confirmed by the Committee for Privileges, 10th August, 1860.

The Siecle has been ordered by sentence of court-martial to pay a fine of 1,000l. for knowingly publishing unfaithful reports of the proceedings of the court.

ward holds that there is so much sound sense in the advice to discontinue distinguishing the Irish with exceptional attention, that our contemporary wishes it were possible to adopt it altogether. But this cannot be done so long as agrarian crime continues so prevalent as it still is. Let us suppose what is extremely improbable, that every case of violence is reported in the Times by its Dublin correspondent. Even on that supposition the category for the last fortnight is sufficiently formidable. Nor can we forget that for every outrage committed ten are probably threatened. The few cases of recorded violence are only the outward evidence of the terrorism which is universally prevalent, and which is enabling the Ribbon Society to carry out its express object in its own way. If this is not an exaggerated view of the state of things in Ireland at the present moment, it is impossible to avoid arriving at two distinct conclusions. In the first place, it is apparent that the remedial legislation of 1868 and 1869 has not been attended with the effects which we were promised should result from it; and in the next place, it is indispensable that some more effectual precautions should be taken to ensure the safety of her Majesty's peaceful subjects in the sister kingdom.—P. M. Gazette.
