will come to the conclusion, that the odium sought to be cast upon him is unjust, unjustifiable and mischievons.

Assuming Mr. Smith's statement to be correct, which bears the impress of truth, fortified as it is by the letter of Mr. Cox, I fear it holds out no inducement to capatalists to invest their means in this country when subjected to the tirade and invective of some agitators, who seek for the unenviable notoriety of appearing in print, rather than attending to the culture and improvement of their own holdings.

Of Mr. Smith I know little beyond the fact, that he and his amiable wife are constantly in the habit of unostentatively and liberally dispensing charity to the neighbouring poor of his residence at Ballynanty, irrespective of sect or creed, by supplying them with nutritious food, in the hour of sickness and misery, as well as clothing and bed covering in the inclement seasons. Is it not cruel, not only to hold such a man to the finger of scorn, but to the bullet of the excited, reckless, and remorseless assassin.

Apologising, sir, for trespassing on your columns, I am, your obedient servant,

THE EARL OF ANTRIM AND HIS TENANTRYdeputation representing the tenantry of the Antrim estates, waited on the Earl of Antrim on Monday to present him with an address on the occasion of his attaining his majority. The deputation were received at two o'clock by his lordship and the Hon. Mard M'Donnell, Mr. Gray, and Mr. Alexander M'Donald, agent. Mr. Hugh Martin read the ad-dress, which congratulated the Earl of Antrim on attaining his majority, and expressed a hope that the same relations would subsist between him and his tenantry as had always existed between them and the Antrim family. His lordship, in reply, thanked the tenantry for their expressions of good will, and said he hoped that cordial relations would always subsist between himself and his tenantry. Great rejoicings followed; the houses were illuminated, and there was a display of fireworks in the evening.

there was a large attendance. The report, which stated that a bill is being prepared to extend the application of the Act relative to trades unions passed last year, and so consolidate and amend the laws relative to arbitration, was discussed at great length, but not passed, the debate being adjourned. Mr. Leatherland was elected president for the ensuing year. Mr. Mundella, referring to bank-ruptcy law, said he feared it would never be so satisfactory in England as in Scotland, because here creditors did not avail themselves of the legal facilities for checking debtors. With reference to the French Treaty, he thought France would be greater sufferer by any modification. Mr. C. Seely, M.P., spoke at some length on the income-tax, and condemned the amalgamation of railway com-
