He thought heir wisdom to have one united di- enormous united diocese of Cork, Ross, had but one council, and the tended at it regularly from the most of the diocese.

Mr Stoney seconded the motion. Philip Dwyer expressed himself in status quo. The diocese was a long ding from south-west to north-east iles. If a surveyor were to investigate which a central council might sit, he ps, find it to be about the middle of (laughter). And if they did not sit entral council would probably sit in hich was outside the diocese altogether, art of the diocese where the members he vicinity would attend, while those re no end of the diocese would absent He, therefore, moved an amendment esolution of the 16th July, 1870, should which was that there be one Diocesan he diocese of Killaloe and Kilsforsa, twelve laymen and six clergymen for of Tipperary, and eight laymen and en for the district of Clare, and that have the power of meeting in two ethod as they should see fit, but that her section should be valid without the ne United Council.

Archdeacon Tatton seconded the ally spoke in favour of the motion of r. French. it also supported the motion. ey asked the Rev. Mr. Dwyer whe- ut the resolution of 1870 or of 1872. Mr. Dwyer said the real difference two resolutions was, that the resolu- O required the section of the united he validity of the act of either section, of 1872 did not. He wished to restore on of 1870. Spaight thought there should be either in or a total separation. N. Reeves agreed with Mr. Spaight's here was but one council and one paid e business of the diocese would most y be discharged. French said that the Rev. Mr. Dwyer's was to return to a state of things which already found unworkable and intoler- adment was put and lost.
