

successful as those of previous years if it desideratum be to have a good circulation and quick and satisfactory dealings between buyer and seller. An order issued by the last evening produced wholesome check and business practice which had previously of buying horses in a furious manner through the streets for the purpose of displaying utilities. But a comparatively small number of steeds were, in consequence of the prohibited, and it was thought by persons that the sparsity of horses rendered a "falling off." This apprehension was not well founded, the greater number of the animals were stable at the repository. There was a goodly sprinkling of thoroughbreds on the other hand. There was an absence of those scraggy patched old hacks that form a prominent feature on former occasions. A drawback was in the attendance of which was very limited indeed. There was only one well known French dealer in the market. England was also poorly represented, and Irish buyers were not so numerous as usual. The supply therefore exceeded the demand and as a natural consequence sales were slowly effected. A general complaint prevailed that as good prices as had been expected could not be obtained, and several owners refused to meet the figures which were offered. Troopers in some demand, a fair number was purchased. The weather was charming.
