

different never grew before. The toast was received with much enthusiasm, and with "For a right good fellow!"

Mr Drinkwater, in responding to the toast, referred to the remarks of Mr Fitzgerald, that clean kisses were said to be the sweetest; but he could seem to have stolen an honor to which he was not entitled. It would be time enough when he had made two blades of grass or even one grow, where not one grew before to receive the thanks that they had just tendered to him. He hoped he could succeed in doing so, and that before the millis water works had passed their first year's anniversary progress; and when the people of the parish had learned to appreciate and estimate that inestimable boon to their trade and commerce, he hoped to be able to invite them down to show them that he had done his work with as much honesty of purpose and faithfulness of which his friend Mr Conyngham had accomplished his (cheers). He hoped that his earnest participation would be fulfilled, and that the engineer of his works would say that he was as well deserving of praise as was Mr Conyngham in receiving of the acknowledgments given to him by his lordship (hear, hear). As a new resident of the locality, he thanked them for the cordial manner in which they toasted his health, and he turned his thanks also to his lordship for the kindness of feeling with which he was received in their historic county by every nobleman and gentleman in it, and when visited by his lordship to view the work in progress, and by the humblest man who sought for work—he felt that each was motivated by the same motive—the good of his county (applause).

The Rev. Dr. Egan and Canon Dwyer ably responded to the health of the clergy of all denominations; Mr Cunningham to that of his own faith, and the toast of the Press brought the proceedings to a termination.
