

The result of the Cambridgeshire to-day was attended with much anxiety by the sporting world. The winner, the American horse, "Foxhall," was not much fancied owing to the great weight he had to carry, the sporting community of this city went principally for the English horse "Shinglass" (who did not at all run in his trial), one gentleman alone standing out to win some thousands by his success, although a good many were on "Lucy Glitters" in a "situation." The American plunger is reported to have won £100,000 by his victory.

On Sunday night a few soldiers of the 107th Hampshire Fusiliers, a little "merry," were giving rule Britannia through Denmark-street, when they were attacked by roughts, beaten, and some of them thrown into a mud-heap. They were aided by some police. Shortly after a Sergeant of the 57th, with some military companions, was singing up George-street, when they were attacked by roughts, the sergeant being badly injured on the head with a stone. They had to take refuge in the Club House, and subsequently were ordered to barracks by an armed party of the Royal Irish Constabulary.

The Secretary of the Charleville Land League, John Rea, and Mr D H O'Connor, Draper, a member of the executive of the same League, were arrested under the Coercion Act on Saturday last, on charges of intimidation, and lodged in the County Jail. On the day previous the police called for Mr Rea, who was from home, but the prisoner hearing of the visit, came into Charleville and gave himself up at the police barrack. A crowd of some hundred people, headed by the Rev. J. Beechiner, PP, accompanied Mr Rea from his home to the barrack. They cheered for the Land League, and after Mr Rea had been arrested they quietly dispersed. A farmer named Moloney, who was expelled from the Land League for paying rent, and who has since been boycotted, is publicly spoken of as a cause of the recent arrests in the town. Moloney is protected by a number of policemen.

The Nenagh Guardian says—While every other country in Europe is advancing in civilisation and refinement, Ireland seems to be sinking into the west depths of degradation, if not barbarism, as the following case, which for brutality can scarcely be excelled, will verify. A few days since the wife of Michael Kennedy, residing in Moneygall, fell ill on the property of Mr Blackett, took suddenly ill with the pains of child-birth, during the absence of her husband. Can it be believed that she could not get a woman in that village to attend her? Dr Nixon, Shinrone, was sent for, and on his arrival, finding how matters were, telegraphed for the Dispensary nurse. She was met on the road by two men, who actually thought to persuade her, but without effect, to return back. It is also said that Dr Nixon got an advice, delivered in a friendly manner, that he ought not to meddle in such cases.

MELANCHOLY ACCIDENT.

Last evening, about eight o'clock, an accident occurred at the Waterford and Limerick Railway Terminus, resulting in the death of John Ryan, army pensioner, and John Gallagher, who were porters in the employment of the Waterford and Limerick Railway Company. It appears that both men were engaged in shunting a waggon, near one of the goods stores, to have it drawn by the shunting engine "Darkey" out of the track of the Ennis train, due at 9.40 p.m. They were behind the waggon, shoving it along, at the time that the shunting engine was moving towards it, the driver of which was unaware that the two men were behind, and the result was that the engine struck the waggon, drove it back, the men being knocked down on the rails, the waggon passing over them, causing painful injuries to both, who were as quickly as possible, after being attended by Dr. Barry, medical attendant of the Company's officials, removed to Barrington's Hospital, and received by Dr. Holmes, who had the surgeons of the day sent for. It was found that Ryan and Gallagher had fractures of both legs above the knee, Ryan's case being the worst, as one of his legs was fearfully lacerated, all the flesh, muscles and tendons being torn away as if with a rack. Gallagher received contusions as well as fracture of both legs. Their recovery was considered hopeless. Ryan died this morning at about 9 o'clock, and Gallagher about 11.30. It is necessary to state that both received all the care that the medical officers of the hospital could bestow, and were also attended up to the last moment by the clergymen of their church. Mr Coroner DeCourcy, opened his enquiry this evening, which after the usual preliminaries were gone through, was adjourned until twelve o'clock to-morrow.

PERFORMANCES OF THE LIMERICK AMATEUR DRAMATIC CLUB.

As was intimated in our advertising columns on Saturday evening, it is proposed by the Limerick Amateur Dramatic Club to give a deuce of entertainments about the latter end of this week. The evenings of Thursday and Friday have been judiciously selected by the club for their performances, inasmuch as it is expected that the Great Munster Fair will attract large numbers of people to the city on both those days; and that in the course of their purchases or sales, as the case may be, many will, not improbably, be disposed towards a little relaxation. At least so think the Dramatic Club and the Limerick Protestant Orphan Society, for both simultaneously signify their intention of providing the fair-going and general public with amusements which appear in every way calculated to beguile the tedium of a temporary stay in the city. What so natural, then, that, after the due administration of prandial comforts, most, if not all of the fair-goers, should be theatrically inclined? For those, then, who should be well-advised enough to visit the theatre on either or both of those days, a pleasing and intellectually enjoyable supply of amusement may be fairly anticipated. To begin with, the local company are under the leadership of Mr. R. J. Guy, whose talent and loyalty to the cause of the drama have been so frequently acknowledged by us that any further reference to them might serve only to detract from the eulogy which he has already only too deservedly obtained at our hands. Mr. Guy, moreover, has been fortunate enough to secure the promise of the assistance of Miss Loraine and Miss Vernon. History, however, in the shade of the advertisement, does not relate resides at Rathlooney. A few minutes before the murder, James Moloney's house was attacked by a party of men, and the door broken open, and shots fired into the house, but no one was injured; and James Moloney's servant swears that he saw Daniel and Edmond Flanagan pass the house immediately before the outrage, but this statement is not believed, as although Flanagan and his father-in-law were not on good terms, still the former is a respectable, well-conducted man, and it is the opinion of the people that he has no connection whatever with the fearful murder of his father-in-law; but there is another, and to the minds of all thinking men the more than probable theory in connection with this murder, clearly showing that it is an agrarian one, and connected with the nefarious Land Agitation. The deceased Michael Moloney, as I have already stated, is a farmer in comfortable, if not comparatively affluent circumstances. He held several farms at very low rents, and was always willing to pay these rents to his landlords. One of those farms he held from Mr Standish O'Grady at a rent of £12 per annum, Griffith's Valuation being £20. After the issue of the Kilmainham "no rent" mandate, notices were printed and extensively posted throughout the district in which the Moloneys lived, cautioning the tenants not to pay any rent so long as Parnell and the other arch-agitators were imprisoned by the Government, and the notice concluded with the following threat:—"If any tenant dares to pay his rent, or any portion of it, he will be sent forthwith before his God in the most merciless manner possible, and without a moment's warning, to account for his evil deeds. We are determined to rid the earth of such vile scum." Notwithstanding this fearful notice, a copy of which was placed on poor Moloney's door, he, like an honest man, willing to pay what he knew to be honestly due by him, went a few days ago to his landlord, and paid his rent in full. In doing this he made no secret of it, but openly, and perhaps not wisely, stated that he would pay his rent; and that afterwards if he found he needed police protection he would apply to the Government for that protection, and get constables to live in his house. An inquest was yesterday held by Mr Coroner Frost on the body of the deceased. Captain McTernan, R.M., of Ennis, was also present. The wife of the deceased was examined, and detailed the circumstances in connection with the murder. The jury returned a verdict of wilful murder against some person or persons unknown. A magisterial investigation will be held to-day into the circumstances in connection with the murder, when the accused will be present.

NEWCASTLE WEST INTELLIGENCE.

(FROM OUR CORRESPONDENT.)

At the usual Petty Sessions, held in Newcastle on Friday last, before Messrs James O'Grady and Hugh M Gun, the former in the chair, a case came on for hearing where the complainant, M Thomas Twomey, asked the bench to grant him an order to enter the lands of Garbally to raise and take away material for the repairs of a road in the locality. Mr Charles M'Carthy, solicitor for the defendant, contended that complainant had no right according to the Act 6th and 7th Wm. IV, to enter this part of Garbally, as it was certainly a haggard within the meaning of said Act. Mr Sheehy was then sworn, and stated that in order to give employment and improve his farm he had a good share of tillage. He had this year a large quantity of hay, straw, oats, potatoes and several green crops, a great portion of which he had already stored in this enclosure, which was his haggard and contained less than an acre or a half, and that he required such for the working of his farm. The chairman remarked that the quantity of land was too much. Mr Sheehy replied that Mr O'Grady's haggard at Rathfree was certainly larger. Their worships granted the order. The defendant asked the bench what
