HUNTING.

LIMERICK CHRONICLE.
 I regret that I have just received the County Limerick come to the decision giving to the obstruction the slight support they tenant-farmers to carry the county has been long of course, the sale of the final and final dispersion of the hunt service can be easily replicated, taken we may say "good" in the county for years, could be revived. Who would suffer most by this? It is simple—viz., "the" these are the farmers of the west it is to keep up, and in Irish hunting is profitable will not fetch the prices sold in the English market as a clever hunter would. The prohibition is aggravating to the but I am sure that they on sufferance, and what between them and the of the Land Bill, the obstructing fox-hunting free the weakest Government in England to release and they must also little rent they may will drive a large proportion of the country to the farmers of Limerick gentlemen of the county I subscribe to a drag they propose holding at this month—the energetic in circulating and meeting. I most being gentleman of the to urge, either by his amusement for people to allow them to believe myself that the the lowest class of men (if they were so), and if when these lives objectionable the applied ash plants I trust they would not the length of this fully.
