Mr F W M'Carthy held his usual fortnightly cattle and sheep sale to-day. There was a good attendance of buyers. In-calf heifers sold at £18 18s; dairy cows, £20; two year old bullocks, £11; hoggets, 58s; strippers, £16. The next sale will be held on the 7th of April.

We understand that the Countess of Dunraven proposes shortly after Easter to give an afternoon concert at Adara Manor in aid of the funds of Barrington's Hospital. Several distinguished amateurs have kindly promised to attend. Further particulars will be announced in a day or two.

The floods at Castleconnell have entirely abated, and the river now is at its usual height at this season. Planting potatoes is being actively carried out by the farmers, and labourers have an abundance of employment at remunerative wages. There is now no distress existing in the district.

The Limerick Musical Society's third and last concert for the session is fixed for Thursday, the 19th day of April next, on which occasion will be produced Rossini's "Stabat Mater," and selections from Haydn's "Creation." The committee and conductor are sparing no exertions to make it a most effective one.

The run of fish at Castleconnell during the week has not been as good as on previous week. No takes of fish have been made during the last four days, with one exception, yesterday, when a large spring fish was taken in fine condition. The "run" during the previous week was one of the best for many seasons past.

At the Clonlara Petty Sessions yesterday, before Captain Mark Maunsell, two men named Orr and Nix were charged with poaching on the lands of Cappantimore on the 27th January last, provided with guns and dogs. On the application of the defendants the cases were postponed to next court day. The other cases were unimportant.

For some time past about one mile of the line of railway between Newmarket and Ardsolus stations of the Ennis line was flooded to a depth of three feet and upwards. We are glad to be in a position to state that the water has now nearly disappeared, and the trains, which, consequent on the floods, had to travel slowly, are now enabled to keep their usual time.

A special meeting of the Town Council has been convened for Monday for the purpose of adopting a resolution with reference to the taking over of the Wellesley Bridge from the Board of Works, and to make preparations for opening same as a free bridge. Communications from the Dublin Corporation relative to the carriage of mails between Dublin and London will also be considered.

In a Cork contemporary yesterday morning a paragraph appeared stating that Head-constables Rollestone and Phelan of this city searched the house of a barber named Ryan, of Ellen-street, on Tuesday last for dynamite. We are authorised to state that no such search took place. It is true Head-constable Rollestone did enter the barber's shop on the occasion, but not to search for dynamite, but to get his hair cut.

The house of a man named Kearney, in charge of a farm off which Lord Cloncurry evicted the tenant some few months ago, was destroyed by fire at Rath, in this county on Thursday night.

FUNERAL OF MR. GEORGE BUNBURY,
LIEUTENANT OF THE FOURTH BRIGADE
ROYAL GARRISON ARTILLERY.

Although military funerals are not unfrequent in Limerick yet the city has seldom witnessed such a solemn and imposing cortege as that which yesterday escorted the remains of Lieutenant George Bunbury to their last resting place under the shadow of St. Mary's Cathedral. Those who joined in the funeral procession and the vast throng who lined the streets exhibited marked sympathy with the Dean of Limerick and his family as well as sincere sorrow for the fate of the young man suddenly called away in his prime. The coffin, which arrived from Dublin by the 3.20 train, was received at the station by Captain Yorke and the officers and Staff of the Limerick City Artillery, to which regiment the deceased gentleman belonged, and was borne on the shoulders of six sergeants of that regiment and placed upon a gun carriage which was in waiting. The Union Jack draped the coffin and gun carriage, and upon it were placed the helmet and sword and numerous floral wreaths and crosses. The procession then formed and moved through the principal streets, headed by the firing party of forty men belonging to the 52nd Regiment, with arms reversed. The band of the same regiment, playing the "Dead March" in "Saul," followed, and then came the gun-carriage, bearing all that is mortal of the promising young officer, followed closely by the chief mourners, and escorted by the pall bearers, Captain Yorke, R.A., Adjutant, Captains Maunsell and Bentley, and Lieutenant Harris, brother officers of the deceased. A large number of citizens of every creed and class, and the representatives of almost all the chief families of the counties of Limerick and Clare, testified by their presence what an impression the sad event had made upon all. The staff of the Munster Fusiliers and that of the City Artillery and a large assembly of officers representing every regiment in the garrison, and a line of carriages brought the procession to a close. The body was received at the Cathedral by the Rev. F. Meredyth, Treasurer, and the Rev. F. C. Hamilton, Precentor, and brought to the choir, where loving hands again added wreaths and floral emblems. The Cathedral was filled to its utmost capacity, and the funeral service, which was choral, was singularly solemn and impressive in the dim religious light, and in the presence of that large and sympathetic assembly. The lesson was read by the Venble. Archdeacon, and the succeeding part of the service by the Rev. F. C. Hamilton, Precentor. At its conclusion, the coffin was borne to the grave; nor did the vast assembly disperse till the three volleys told that the last rites had been paid, that the body had been committed "in sure and certain hope" to its last resting-place, there to abide till the day when the earth shall give up her dead, and the trump of the Archangel shall summon young and old to stand before the throne of God.

THE LIMERICK FISHERY CASE.

At the assizes held here this week Mr Eyre Powell, J.P., Mount Prospect, Passage West, county Cork, eldest son of the late Eyre Powell, formerly of "Prospect," in this county, has
