John Kelly, supposed to be from Birmingham, was found by the police senseless and shockingly injured early this morning in the stable of the White Swan Hotel, Nottingham. He had, it is supposed, fallen from the third story while trying to effect an entry into the hotel.

BRITISH RAILWAY SECURITIES.—The Financial News says—It is difficult to understand why the prospect of war with Russia should cause a sharp decline in British Railway Securities. A foreign war would tend to improve rather than injure the business of our railways, and its first effect would certainly be to largely increase their earnings. In the event of war speculative sellers at present prices will probably have cause to regret
