 ousion the matter prevailed for a short time on Friday morning in the space fronting the Mairie of the Gobelins Quarter, Paris, where the local fair is being held.

 About eleven o'clock, taking advantage of the fact that a careless keeper had left the cage open, one of the lions of Bidel's menagerie quietly escaped, and with noble and measured tread made its way through the maze of booths to the open. There were many people about, and the sudden apparition of the formidable animal caused great excitement, women and children flying in all directions with screams of terror.
 The news of its escape had already preceded the lion, when it reached the neighbourhood of the Gobelins, and a number of men armed with sticks mustered up courage and drove it into the yard of a house. Bidel came up just then with his assistants and a cage, and the stray lion was safely secured.
