

LUGGAGE ON RAILWAY PLATFORMS

(FROM THE DAILY TELEGRAPH.)

A case illustrating the dangers which beset luggage on railway platforms has recently been heard before a magistrate, and the accused persons, as a result of the inquiry, were remanded. They were a couple of men who were seen to enter a station, and who were afterwards described as "well-dressed and well-spoken."

Their movements, however, seem to have brought them under the suspicion of two detectives, who, after following them about to different parts of the station, at length beheld one of them lay his hands on a Gladstone bag, and walk off with it. Of course the other man, the prisoner really thought that the bag was his own; and was willing until guilt is proved—to take the most charitable view of his conduct.

When arrested, the gentleman who had just taken the bag, was so violently that the detective who effected the arrest was "twice thrown to the ground." The muscular contest between them, however, at last secured, and his companion, following to the police station at a respectful distance, was also detained there on suspicion. Now, this case is supplemented by an experience of another gentleman, who had a piece of luggage at a London railway platform, but after a time was lucky enough to recover it.

In both instances the danger was the same; only in the latter case there was the fortunate circumstance that the luggage, carried off by mistake, was returned to him. It is obvious that if a man is to be safe, he must not get a porter to take his luggage off at once, and then no questions are asked beyond the necessary inquiry, "Which is your box?" and of course no check or ticket for the baggage has to be produced, because none are printed.

The railway officials trust to the honesty of passengers, and there is the guarantee of all being right, which is the best system in the world. It is a system which is not only safe, but also economical, and it is a system which is not only safe, but also economical, and it is a system which is not only safe, but also economical.

The Liverpool Daily Post has a cheery word for pipes. It says that the American people are not only fond of pipes, but also of the pipe-smoking habit. The pipe is a favorite article of furniture, and it is a favorite article of furniture, and it is a favorite article of furniture.
