

the Plan of Campaign. He quite understood the difficulty of the priests most of whom had sprung from the tenant farmer class themselves.

THE DERBY.—A Derby in which the favourite won, in which there was no rain to speak of, not too much sun, comparatively little dust, and some fairly interesting racing, may be said to be on the whole successful. The only feature of novelty was the fact that one of the horses bolted no fewer than four times at the start, and on one occasion ran nearly the whole course before he could be stopped. This was aggravating to the sportsmen who were anxious for the event of the day to be over and done with; but a good many members of the non-sporting public rather enjoyed Chillington's performance, which, after all, was quite as amusing as "Aunt Sally" or shooting at a miniature target with rock rifles. People have constantly been prophesying that the Derby would cease to be a popular holiday; it remains, and Belgravia, Seven Dials, and Chillington, were all nearly as well represented as usual on the course and the road.
