THE BURGLARY SEASON.—The Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis has issued the following notice to the proprietors of detached houses: On the evening of the 27th ult, a mansion in the neighbourhood of London was broken into by thieves, who entered through a bedroom window by means of a ladder. Several offences of this kind have recently occurred at mansions in the country and near London, but owing to the want of a sufficient description of the thieves, the police will have great difficulty in tracing them. It is to be feared, therefore, that other houses will be attacked by the same gang. The offences are generally committed between the hours of 7 and 10 in the evening, during the family dinner hour, and when the upper part of the house is without occupants. Proprietors of detached houses standing in their own grounds are specially warned to see that all windows are closed and securely fastened in the evening, and urgent attention is called to the imprudence of keeping valuable jewellery, in wardrobes, in bed, and dressing rooms. It is valuable portable property of this kind which such burglars alone seek for, and keeping it in a proper thief-proof safe affords absolute security against their depredations. As the removal of the ladder, by which they gain access to the upper windows, would insure the capture of the thieves; they generally stretch wire across the lawn to trip up pursuers; and in the last case the hall door and side doors of the house were securely fastened from the outside by wire to prevent pursuit. Should any persons be seen loitering about or directing attention to any house or grounds, their description should be noted, and the police of the locality communicated with.
