MEETING OF THE MEN LAS

A crowded meeting of the Pork Buyers was held in the band-room, John's Square for the purpose of considering the proposition by the merchants at their meeting of the evening.

Mr Michael Sheahan, president, occupied the chair. In dealing with the resolution proposed by the merchants, he said that the demands which they proposed to grant to the men would not be accepted. Their demands were to get a penny for each pig killed, for the sioners and jobbers, and until the men were conceded the men would not consent to what influence a pig buyer in Limerick, or Waterford, brought to bear on a settlement of the dispute would arrive at until he, or a representative of the men, were present. The merchants divided the employees into three classes, first, second, and third, and they also laid down conditions with regard to apprentices. He would know by whose authority they did not know men had not given it to them; when their rights they would then take them into consideration. They would have no say in any store in Limerick except the men, who were first entitled to it. He had been informed that deputation of merchants of Limerick, Cork, and Waterford met at the Junction on Saturday with a view to arriving at a settlement, but the men, which he, on behalf of the men, demanded not be taken as granted until he was satisfied. He had originated this fight in an honest way and he meant to finish it honourably. He wished to inform Mr Con Hogarty, Michael Power that no influence should be brought to bear upon the merchants, in the estimation in which they might be held would ever settle the dispute between the merchants and men, unless he were prevailed upon by God's name, to give up to anyone, either lay or clerical, no matter what position he occupied, who came forward to settle their dispute; let them be told they would not submit to no concessions until their demands were satisfied in full. Any other concessions would be refused. His demands was his price and one item of that would not be departed from and he believed he could rely on the support of the men in that principle. (He asked) What legal right had they to a penny? What legal right had the merchants to a penny from the pig buyers? That was their dispute and it should be granted before they were satisfied. He was very sorry to have to tell the men that deputation of the pig buyers at the Junction to speak against the men was by him, and he was informed that Mr Power strongly opposed them; but he told
