have at length decided as to what to take owing to the manner in which more important bills have been introduced in the present Parliament. After it has been agreed upon to adjourn to as speedy a conclusion as possible, bringing all contentious business before Parliament to meet in November, but not till next July, or further if necessary, ours of a speedy appeal to the Government before, unfounded. The next session, if the present Government continues till the end of it, will be the most and a great deal of business will be done through in spite of obstruction. The Government has only themselves to thank for the delay of a winter Session with the inevitable accompaniment of sea sickness in cold and darkness.

SAD DROWNING FATALITY.

Yesterday Mr Coroner J. DeCoursey and a jury held an inquest in the City Courthouse touching the death of Thomas Behan, a sailor, from Kilrush, whose body was found drowned at Arthur's-quay about 3.30 yesterday morning.

Mr Thomas Crahan deposed that the body now in the morgue was that of Thomas Behan. He was a boatman in his employment. The last time he saw him alive was about five o'clock on the previous evening.

Thomas O'Halloran, of Moyasta, near Kilkee, was examined, and deposed that he was a seaman. He was in Limerick on Thursday, and met Thomas Behan. The last time he saw him alive was about nine o'clock on the night previous to his death. He appeared to have had some drink taken at that time. About one o'clock on yesterday morning, while in bed in his bunk, he heard a splash in the water, and jumped up and looked around but could see nothing unusual. He observed two fishermen coming up at the Strand side, and they proceeded towards him and remarked that they heard a cry in the water like some one seeking help. He lighted a lantern for them and they searched around the boat, but could find nothing to create suspicion that a man was drowned there. About three o'clock the boy with him called his attention to a form in the water, and he at once communicated with the police. The body was shortly afterwards picked up, and he identified it as that of Behan.

Michal Joyce, boatman from Kilrush at present in Limerick, was also examined, and gave similar evidence.

Acting-Sergeant Greene deposed that about 3.25 yesterday morning three men came to the barracks at William street, and reported to him that there was a body in the bed of the river in Arthur's Quay. Accompanied by Constable Reidy he went to the men and saw the body in the water, which he had removed to the morgue. The three men present identified the body. The only effects found on his person or in the boat was an empty purse, a handkerchief, and his hat.

There being no other evidence, the jury returned a verdict to the effect that the man was drowned yesterday morning, and that same was accidental.

the acts stated in the indictment were denied the said lands were his property.

The jury found that the lands belonged to Wm. Butler as executor, and they gave a verdict in favour of the defendant, against William Butler on his criminal prosecution.

This concluded the business of the court for the day.
