

published in that paper. The libel complained of was contained in a comment on a concert given by the plaintiff's sister, and at which the plaintiff himself sang five comic songs. The criticism which appeared a couple of days afterwards in the Derry Sentinel was favourable to the performance except as to the comic songs, and it was this portion of the notice the plaintiff complained of.

The defendant pleaded fair comment, no libel, and he also pleaded justification. Considerable amusement was caused in court by the reading by counsel of the five comic songs to which exception had been taken. They included, "Quite English," "M'Carthy's widow," "For a week or two," "He's in an asylum now," and "The Irish spree." The defendant relied chiefly on the last named song as containing expressions which were not suitable for the class of persons present at the concert, or to be sung before young persons.

The Jury found for the defendant.

Counsel for plaintiff—Messrs R. Adams, Q.C. and D. S. Henry (instructed by Mr Maxwell).

Counsel for defendant—Messrs M'Loughlin, Q.C. and Lane (instructed by Messrs Lane).

THE COST OF A ROYAL TELEGRAM.—It will be remembered that upon the death of the Duc d'Aosta the event was announced to his son, the Duke of the Abruzzi, who was at Rio de Janeiro with his ship, in a long telegram from his uncle, King Humbert. The Italian papers state that the telegram contained 1,200 words, and that, owing to the high telegraphic tariff between Italy and Brazil, its transmission cost £534 1s 3½d. That is surely the most costly lettre ps faire part that has ever been heard of.
