DEATH BY AN OGHAM STONE.

A labourer in the employment of the [Name] mines, met his death of Saturday afternoon under peculiar circumstances in the townland of Castlehall, near Bandon, seven immense and curious Ogham inscriptions. These local traditions, have stood in the memory of time immemorial, and are interesting places of some warriors there in pre-Christian times. Duns or cathairs in the neighbourhood some curious superstitions of the country people, whoever touches the Ogham stones referred to, meet an untimely end. It seems that [Name] was very anxious to have one of the stones brought into town, and sent Murphy to remove one. [Name] a mate man was digging around the stone, a mass fell on him, crushing and in a frightful manner. When discovered, beyond all assistance, it was necessary to hold an inquest, yesterday, the funeral being thinks there is only one way to get out of this expensive luxury of dress as displayed on the stage. It is for the actresses to compel all directors to buy their own costumes after the example set by the Théâtre Français, where everything is furnished to the actresses, from head-dresses and toilettes to garters.

RAPID DRESSING.

The writer knows all the secrets of the theatrical dressing-room. When (we are told) a rapid change of costume is necessary, the dress is spread out on a chair inside the actress's dressing-room at the theatre. A peculiarity of the dress is that all the bows and other ornaments are already fastened in place, and the garment is open in front from neck to hem, though so contrived that the junction will not be visible when worn. By this arrangement the actress can make a complete change of costume in less than five minutes.

Miss Nellie Bly, the young New York journalist, has won the race around the world, having completed her tour in 72 days 15 hours, and beaten the record and Miss Brisland.

The body of Mr Thomas Marsh, gentleman, of Egremont, near Liverpool, was found on the beach at Llandudno yesterday. He went for a cruise in his yacht a fortnight ago and had not since been seen. The yacht foundered in Conway Bay.
