

leave them most exposed to attacks of cholera, but now their superiors in the scale are learning that pestilence, like fire, is no respecter of persons. Cholera is now accompanied by a virulent form of dysentery, which also slays its share of victims. The recurrences of the reappearance and increased prevalence of cholera in Spain need not cause undue alarm or feeling of anxiety as far as this country is concerned. It is evidently fostered and encouraged by heat, but dirt, bad smells, pollution, and defective sewage will give it a home. We have dirt and bad drainage in this country unfortunately, but on the other hand, it is seldom the temperature is so high as to develop the poison germs to an extent as to give rise to serious epidemics. In common prudence nothing should be left undone to avoid all danger from cholera, a former affliction of which has a prominent mark in the memories of those who have experienced it. Cleanliness, both of one's person and one's surroundings, should always be carefully attended to. Fresh air, and plenty of pure drinking water, and a copious use of the same element externally, with the addition of soap, are the best preventatives against cholera and other disorders, now and at all times. Cleanliness is not only next to Godliness, but it is the very surest method of preserving health in such condition that attacks of cholera will pass off which might otherwise have produced serious effects. Along with these precautions a cheerful frame of mind is to be maintained, and in disease, as in everything else, courage is half the battle. It is well known that fear lays one open to infection, and that cowardice is the active means of bringing on what is dreaded even in physical health.

With courage and cleanliness there is no foreboding or anticipation of danger from cholera, the more especially as the time for its arising from heat has almost passed.

at dramatic author and a well-known actor, was used away in the person of Dion Boucicault, whose name which his genius has made for him will long live green in the memories of play-thrown on the road on some stones. His leg was broken between the knee and the ankle, and he was taken into a house near by, where he remained until Dr Fogerty arrived and attended to the injured limb. Subsequently Mr Harris was conveyed to his residence in town, and it is hoped that after some weeks he will be all right again.

THE WATERFORD AND LIMERICK RAILWAY STRIKE.

As announced in our last issue, a settlement has been arrived at in connection with the strike of the Locomotive men of the Waterford and Limerick Railway Company. The directors have agreed to an aggregate advance of £520 per annum, and this sum will be distributed by Mr Robinson, the Locomotive Superintendent. Yesterday the Mayor, Alderman Counihan, Mr David Begley, Mr John Bernal, and Mr P. S. Connolly, solicitor, members of the deputation appointed to meet the directors on Thursday, met the strike committee at the Town Hall. They explained fully what they had arranged with the directors of the company, and the men expressed themselves satisfied with the terms of settlement. The men will resume work on Monday next. The strike committee cordially thanked the Mayor and the members of the deputation for the admirable manner in which they had acted in effecting a fair settlement of the strike. Alderman O'Mara, who had materially assisted in the settlement, would have been present yesterday only that he had to go to Liverpool on commercial business. Much gratification is expressed in the city at the settlement of the dispute.

DROWNING ACCIDENT.

The dead body of Thomas Louthe was found this morning at Mount Kenilott Quay by Constable Hickey, of the Docks Station. The deceased was a sailor on board the Volant, which arrived in the port yesterday morning. It appears that at a late hour last evening deceased was observed wandering about the Docks in an intoxicated condition, and when near his vessel he fell into the water. Assistance was at once requisitioned, but all efforts to save the drowning man proved futile. The body was removed to the morgue to-day, and subsequently an inquest was held by Mr Coroner DeCoursey. Dr Shanahan was examined, and gave evidence that death resulted from drowning. The jury returned a verdict in accordance with the medical testimony. Sergeant Flynn watched the case on behalf of the police.

SALE OF 42 GEORGE-STREET AND CECIL STREET.

On Thursday next, 25th September, Mr F. W. M'Carthy, Auctioneer, will dispose of the interest and good-will in these first-class grocery concerns and valuable licensed premises by instructions of Mr Thomas Ray, who is going abroad. These extensive premises are situate at the corner of one of the best business blocks in George street, with separate entrance from each street. The bar trade is second to none in the city. The establishment is altogether in the most flourishing tion—Resol policy of t credited lea of John Di attribute th of false fri ought to be The Govern step becaus quarter the Mr T M it were po O'Brien, Fa would be I present stat tem of Balf was to pr They had boards who and he had mark their Mr Henry said he att to the we who shoul He earn the teachi have sunk people that to put their Salisbury (hisses) hav these two r on their pre Mr M. J. which was ceedings te

CORK CO

At a mee yesterday, siding, on t Mayor), se following the Corpori departure t for enrollin city of Corl Council pas the occasio the homes committee sending th grossed in diture not resolution for want o over half a formed.

SIR CHAR

Sir Char Darlington of Messrs (the warran executed u have temp resistance. kind was a of vaguent