DEATH OF ANOTHER PARACHUTIST.

In the presence of a large number of spectators, Professor Dieve, said to be a native of Manor, an accomplished aeronaut, made an ascent with his balloon at Pleasant Beach, New York, intending to reach the earth again by means of a parachute. The wind at the time was not exactly favourable for the enterprise, blowing steadily along the shore. Directly after ascending, the balloon was caught by another current of air, and wafted out The parachutist must evidently have misjudged his position, or else considered an immediate descent as his only chance. He detached the parachute and descended quickly. He fell with some force into the water, where he was drowned, being, doubtless, entangled in the wreckage of his parachute. The spectators were horrified at the result.
