Mr Richie, speaking at Croydon last night, said he could only look with feelings of disgust upon the manner in which voters were led to the poll by priests at the recent Sligo election, when one out of three voters could neither read nor write. Priestly influence, whether Protestant or Catholic, outside its own sphere of action, he strongly denounced.

The steamship companies are surprised at the vigorous manner in which the American authorities are enforcing the immigrant laws. Large numbers of immigrants are being returned nearly every day, some as unclean, some as ailing, and others as having criminal records in Europe. The steamship companies wished to establish a large office in order to take charge themselves of these immigrants, whilst the vessels conveying them remained in port, but their request to do so was flatly refused. They must be sent at once aboard, and the companies are held responsible for their safe keeping. The ships are even forced to take them back whence they came, even if the vessel conveying them is not bound there. Many of the immigrants are Italians.

Announcements of Births, Marriages, and Deaths not exceeding 5 lines (which must in all cases be duly authenticated) are charged 2s 6d each. For every additional line, 6d.

AN IRISH MISER.—According to American papers to hand, an old woman named Kate Roach, of Killarney, was found almost starved to death in her lodgings in New York, and was taken to hospital, where she subsequently died. To enter the room the police were obliged to climb a fire-escape. They found in the room two bank books, done up in handkerchiefs and tucked away among the rags. Then they heard the unmistakable jingle of gold, and discovered 150 English sovereigns, 7 American eagles, and 90 dols 67c in smaller coin; a portrait of a beautiful woman about 30 years of age, supposed to represent the old woman in her younger days, a stale loaf of bread, and an egg. A letter was found among the effects, dated "Killarney, Dec 27, 1888." The writer is John Roach, brother of Kate Roach. After telling her of the safe arrival of his son Thomas from America where, he appears to have met his aunt. John Roach expresses the wish that he and his sister might live near each other, and asks her in a very affectionate manner to let him have some money. The writer is believed to be the woman's only relative. She told her landlord, Mr Cunningham, that she had been obliged to send money to her brother in Ireland, and gave that as an excuse for not paying her rent.
